Arizona to the Front In Flotation Process

H. J. Stander, who is doing flotation Mines and for the Arizona State Bureau of Mines, has been called to Brunswick, Georgia, for consultation work with the Yaryan Oil and Rosin Co. of that city. Mr. Stander has been making an special study of oils, with a view to determaining the relations of the oils and the oil mixture to the minerals contained in the Oil flotation has revolutationized the milling business and has made possible the profitable working of deposits that have not heretofore been avaliable. [It has also given value to dumps that have taking the lead in experimental work along this line, and will undoubtedly assist greatly in putting Arizona in the foreground in flotation advancement.

Much interest all through the State of Arizona is occasioned by the value of the ores of molybdenum, but a word of caution must be given. Molybdenum is used almost entirely for the hardening of steel and as only a very small percentage is needed, the market is limited. While the uses of molybdenum are steadily increasing, the demand can be easily oversupplied. Molybdenum is found in a great many granites, but in most cases in too small percentage to be economically recovered. There are several districts in Arizona where the granite contains sufficient molybdenite to be treated profitably. Much information about this metal in Arizona is given in the Bulletin No. 5 of the Arizona State Bureau of Mines. This may be obtained free by writing the director, Charles F. Willis, Tucson, Arizona.

In response to the article in last week's Patagonian, asking for clothing the ore has not yet been determined. for a few Mexican children, good-hearted and charitable women of Patagonia have liberally responded. Mrs. Orton Phelps of the Mowry sent down enough clothing to supply several little ones. .Mrs. James Kane and others also contributed very liberaly. There are only a year ago for a prospecting trip to the Parker Canyon temorrow (Saturday), few cases of families in destitute circumstances in Patagonia as most everyone here is working and consequently fairly prosperous. The few cases of povarty needing relief will now be attended to, thanks to the generosity of people in this community.

Lots here in Patagonia are not very high just now and should be a safe investment-they will surely be very much higher if the present mining activity continues.

A big dance will be given in the school house in the San Rafael on the evening of Friday, March the 17th (the 17th of Ireland). Music will be furnished by the Fruitland orchestra, and all are invited and assured of a big time. The dance will be en masque, and also "hardtime" costumes will be worn, thus assuring considerable comedy.

SCORED HEAVILY ON PRINCE

Beau Brummell's Remark Left Him Master of Situation, but Victory Was a Costly One.

The greatest dandy and fop of modern times was George Brummell, known as Beau Brummell. He lived a life delicate and leisured, and since he was poor his living depended upon the favor of the court. The court at that time was represented in the set where the beau's influence was felt by the prince of Wales, who was, if truth must be told, not a slender man. It happened that the prince and the beau quarreled.

To be a dandy is not generally considered the first mark of being a brave man, but Beau Brummell gave instant proof that he was not only a great dandy but a great man as well. The details of the story are somewhat vague, but the main facts are certain. Brummell knew that his quarrel with the prince would mean an end of his prestige, but he refused to yield, and on the day following the quarrel went walking with a friend, said to have been Sheridan.

The news of the rupture between the prince and the dictator of fashions had spread, and there were not a few who gathered in the hopes of a passage at arms between them.

It happened that Sheridan and Brummell met the prince and his party. With princely ostentation the royal personage called Sheridan aside and spoke to him, pointedly ignoring Brummell, who stood by. Brummell did not flinch in the crisis, he was the only person who seemed to be indifferent. Then Sheridan returned.

With a gesture of indifference Brummell lifted his glasses to his eyes and, indicating with a slight wave of his hand the person to whom he referred, he asked in a clear but languid voice the famous question:

"Sherry, who's your fat friend?" Brummell spent the greater part of the remainder of his life in Calais, an outcast, a broken man. But with the memory of his great rebuke, it can hardly be said that in the crisis he was found wanting.

LESSON FOR KING'S STEWARD

Frederick William III of Prussia Was Man of Few Words-Interested Himself in Details.

.Editor and Owner King Frederick William III of Prus sia was a man of few words; whatever he had to say was always brief and to the point, as the following anecdote from a foreign journal shows:

The king, who was accustomed to interest himself in all the details of court management, ordered his stewand to take special pains to see that all the carriages and wagons were amply supplied with food and drink whenever they left for a journey of a day or so; but it sometimes happened that the steward failed in his duty and dispatched the drivers without any food, giving them a coin, perhaps, At one of the rehearsals of "Robin to buy what they wanted. There are houses full of conveniences and luxuries in which no one is at home; the men and women who live in them are homeless. To such men and women, as to the men and women to whom marriage is a mere social contract and the family a mere social arrangement, there is no going home, no refuge for the spirit, no place of understanding and vision. There are no more pathetic figures in the world of today than these homeless men and women; restless, discontented and unhappy, and utterly blind to the tragedy of a life in which there is no going home.-The Outlook.

SYNOPSIS. -13-

Ise Comte de Sabron, captain of French savairy, takes to his quarters to raise by hand a motherless Irish terrier pup, and bames it Pitchoune. He dines with the Marquise d'Esclignac and meets Miss Julia Redmond, American heiress. He is ordered to Algiers but is not allowed to take servants or dogs. Miss Redmond takes care of Pitchoune, who, longing for his master, runs away from her. The marquise plans to marry Julia to the Duc de Tremont. Pitchoune follows Sabron to Algiers, dog and master meet, and Sabron gets permission to keep his dog with him. The Duc de Tremont finds the American heiress capricious. Sabron, wounded in an engagement, falls into the dry bed of a river and is watched over by Pitchoune. After a horrible night and day Pitchoune leaves him. Tremont takes Julia and the marquise to Aigiers in his yacht but has doubts about Julia's Red Cross mission. After long search Julia gets trace of Sabron's whereabouts. Julia for the moment turns matchmaker in behalf of Tremont. Hammet Abou tells the Marquise where he thinks Sabron may be found.

Pitchoune ran with his nose to the ground. There were several trails for a dog to follow on that apparently untrodden page of desert history. Which one would he choose? Without a scent a dog does nothing. His nostrils are his instinct. His devotion, his faithfulness, his intelligence, his heart-all come through his nose. A man's heart, they sav, is in his stomach-or in his pocket. A dog's is in his nostrils. If Pitchoune had chosen the wrong direction, this story would never have been written. Michette did not give birth to the sixth puppy, in the stables of the garrison, for nothing. Nor had Sabron saved him on the night of the memorable dinner for nothing.

With his nose flat to the sands Pitchoune smelt to east and to west, to north and south, took a scent to the east, decided on it-for what reason will never be told-and followed it. Patigue and hunger were forgotten as hour after hour Pitchoune ran scross the Sahara. Mercifully, the sun had been clouded by the precursor of a windstorm. The air was almost cool. Mercifully, the wind did not arise until the little terrier had pursued his course to the end.

There are occasions when an animal's intelligence surpasses the hu-When, toward evening of the twelve hours that it had taken him to reach a certain point, he came to a settlement of mud huts on the borders of an oasis, he was pretty nearly at the end of his strength. The oasis was the only sign of life in five hundred miles. There was very little left in his small body. He lay down panting, but his bright spirit was unwilling just then to leave his form and hovered near him. In the religion of Tatman dogs alone have souls.

Pitchoune panted and dragged him wayfarer hid himself in the bushes and slept till morning. All night he was racked with convulsive twitches. but he slept and in his dreams he killed a voung chicken and ate it. In the morning he took a bath in the pool, and the sun rose while he swam in the water.

If Sabron or Miss Redmond could have seen him he would have seem 1 the epitome of heartless egoism. He was the epitome of wisdom. Instinct and wisdom sometimes go closely together. Solomon was only instinctive when he asked for wisdom. The epicurean Lucullus, when dying, asked for a certain Nile fish cooked in Pitchoune shook out his short hairy body and came out of the oasis pool into the sunlight and trotted into the Arabian village.

Fatou Anni parched corn in a bramier before her house. Her house was a mu hut with yellow walls. It had no roof and was open to the sky. Fatou Anni was ninety years old, straight as a lance—straight as one of the lances the men of the village carried when they went to dispute with white people. These lances with which the young men had fought, had won them the last battle. They had been victorious on the field. Fatou Anni was the grandmother of many men. She had been the mother of many men. Now she parched corn tranquilly, prayerfully. "Allah! that the corn should not burn; Allah! that it should be sweet; Allah! that her men should be always successful." She was the fetish of the settlement. In a single blue garment, her black scrawny breast uncovered, the thin veil that the Fellaheen wear pushed back from her face, her fine eyes were revealed and she might over her corn! "Allah! Allah Akbar!" Rather than anything should happen to Fatou Anni, the settlement would have roasted its enemies alive, torn them in shreds. Some of them said that she was two hundred years old. There was a charmed ring drawn around her house. People supposed that if any creature crossed it

sky, unstained by a single cloud, was blue as a turquoise floor, and against it, black and portentous, flew the vultures. Here and there the sun-touched Pools gave life and reason to the oasis.

Fatou Anni parched her corn. Her barbaric chant was interrupted by a sharp bark and a low pleading whine. She had never heard sounds just like that. The dogs of the village were great wolflike creatures. Pitchoune's bark was angelic compared with theirs. He crossed the charmed circle drawn around her house, and did not fall dead, and stood before her, whining. Fatou Anni left her corn, stood upright and looked at Pitchoune. To her the Irish terrier was an apparition. The fact that he had not fallen dead proved that he was beloved of Allah. He was, perhaps, a genie, an afrit.

Pitchoune fawned at her feet. She murmured a line of the Koran. It did not seem to affect his demonstrative affection. The woman bent down to him after making a pass against the Evil Eye, and touched him, and Pitchoune licked her hand.

Fatou Anni screamed, dropped him, went into the house and made her ablutions. When she came out Pitchoune sat patiently before the parched corn, and he again came crawling to her.

The Arabian woman lived in the last hut of the village. She could satisfy her curiosity without shocking her neighbors. She bent down to scrutinize Pitchoune's collar. There was a sacred medal on it with sacred inscriptions which she could not read But as soon as she had freed him this time, Pitchoune tore himself away from her, flew out of the sacred ring and disappeared. The he ran back, barking appealingly; he took the hem of her dress in his mouth and pulled her. He repeatedly did this and the superstitious Arabian believed herself to be called divinely. She cautiously left the doorstep, her veil falling be fore her face, came out of the sacred ring, followed to the edge of the berry field. From there Pitchoune sped over the desert; when he stopped and looked back at her. Fatou Anni did not follow, and he returned to renew his entreaties. When she tried to touch him he escaped, keeping at a

She gathered her robe around her and, statelily and impressively, started toward the huts of her grandsons. When she returned, eight young warriors, fully armed, accompanied her. Pitchoune sat beside the parched corn. watching the brazier and her meal. Fatou Anni pointed to the desert.

She said to the young men, "Go with this genie. There is something he wishes to a nw us. Allah is great.

When the Capitaine de Sabron opened his eyes in consciousness, they encountered a square of blazing blue heaven. He weakly put up his hand to shade his sight, and a cotton awning, supported by four bamboo poles, was swiftly raised over his head. He saw objects and took cognizance of them. On the floor in the low doorway of a mud but sat three litttle naked children covered with flies and dirt. He was the guest of Fatou Anni. These were three of her hundred great-great-grandchildren. The babies were playing with a little dog. Sabron knew the dog but could the air was still cool. Overhead, the odors which met his nostrils at every Companion.

breath he drew. He saked in Arabic: "Where am I?"

"In the hut of victory," said Fatou Anni. Pitchoune overheard the voice and came to Sabron's side. His master murmured: "Where are we, my friend?"

The dog leaped on his bed and licked his face. Fatou Anni, with a whisk of straw, swept the files from him. A French Soldiers View Mementoes of great weakness spread its wings above him and he fell asleep.

Days are all alike to those who lie in mortal sickness. The hours are intensely colorless and they slip and slip and slip into painful wakefulness, into fever, into drowsiness finally, and then into weakness.

The Capitaine de Sabron, although he had no family to speak of, did pos- the palace of Whitehall, from a winsess, unknown to the Marquise d'Esclignac, an old aunt in the provinces. King Charles I stepped onto the exeand a handful of heartless cousins who were indifferent to him. Nevertheless he clung to life and in the hut of Fatou Anni fought for existence. Every time that he was conscious he struggled anew to hold to the thread of life. Whenever he grasped the thread he vanquished, and whenever he lost it, he went down, down.

Fatou Anni cherished him. He was a soldier who had fallen in the battle against her sons and grandsons. He was a man and a strong one, and she despised women. He was her prey and he was her reward and she cared for him; as she did so, she became maternal.

His eyes which, when he was conscious, thanked her; his thin hands that moved on the rough blue robe thrown over him, the devotion of the dog-found a responsive chord in the great-grandmother's heart. Once he smiled at one of the naked, big-bellied great-great-grandchildren. Beni Hassan, three years old, came up to Sabron with his fingers in his mouth and chattered like a bird. This proved to Fatou Anni that Sabron had not the Evil Eye. No one but the children were admitted to the hut, but the sun and the flies and the cries of the village came in without permission, and now and then, when the winds arose; he could hear the stirring of the palm trees.

Sabron was reduced to skin and bone. His nourishment was insufficient, and the absence of all decent care was slowly taking him to death. It will never be known why he did not Pitchoune took to making long excursions. He would be absent for days, and in his clouded mind Sabron thought the dog was reconnoitering for him over the vast pink sea without there-which, if one could sail across as in a ship, one would sail to France, through the walls of mellow old Taras con, to the chateau of good King Rene; one would sail as the moon sails, and through an open window one might hear the sound of a woman's voice singing. The song, ever illusive and irritating in its persistency, tantalized his sick ears.

Sabron did not know that he would have found the chateau shut had be sailed there in the moon. It was as well that he did not know, for his wandering thought would not have known where to follow, and there was repose in thinking of the Chateau d'Esclig-

It grew terribly hot. Fatou Anni, by his side, fanned him with a fan she had woven. The great-great-grandchildren on the floor in the mud fought together. They quarreled over bits of colored glass. Sabron's breath came panting. Without, he heard the cries of the warriors, the lance-bearers—he heard the cries of Fatou anni's sons who were going out to battle. The French soldiers were in a distant part of the Sahara and Fatou Anni's grandchildren were going out to pillage and destroy. The old woman by his side cried out and beat her breast. Now and then she looked at him curiously, as if she saw death on his pale face. Now that all her sons and grandsons had gone, he was the only man left in the village, as even boys of sixteen had joined the raid. She wiped his forehead and gave him a potion that had been pierced with arrows. It was all she could do for a captive.

Toward sundown, for the first time Sabron felt a little better, and after twenty-four hours' absence, Pitchoune whined at the hut door, but would not come in. Fatou Anni called on Allah, left her patient and went out to see what was the matter with the dog. At the door, in the shade of a palm, stood the Downfall of Napoleon, Exhib-Ited in British Capital, Without Expression of Emotion.

Every American visitor to London, probably, makes a call at the threestoried building opposite the Horse Guard, the former banqueting hall of dow on the second floor of which cution platform and, after addressing the gathered throng, bravely met his tragic fate, remarks the London; Times.

The building is now called the Royal United Service Museum, and in the main hall, contrasting strangely with the richly figured ceilings by Peter, Paul Rubens, are thousands of relics recalling the almost numberless wars in which the manhood of this country, has engaged.

Yesterday the writer followed through the turnstile of the museum two French infantry soldiers, on leave from the front, fresh from months of fighting, side by side with Tommy Atkins, against a common foe. In the great hall, in enormous show cases, are models setting out the exact posttions at the battles of Trafalgar and Waterloo, those historic combats on land and on sea which did so much to mar the fortunes of Napoleon and to shatter the predominant position of France.

In one case, little patches of makebelieve smoke trace the two lines, the allies and the French, while clusters of tiny red brick houses mark the positions of villages of Belgium familiar even to every follower of the present world struggle.

In the second case the fleet of Nelson is shown at the critical moment when, led by the Victory and the Fighting Temeraire, it pierced the lines of the French and Spanish fleets. Indeed, it seemed to the writer as he hung over the showcases and studied the positions, that Nelson used the "phalanx" as effectively as did Von Mackensen in Galicia, and as French and Joffre are trying to do in France and Belgium now.

But, beside these two cases, there are more immediate links with the French and English past. Nearby is the akeleton of Napoleon's favorite charger. In another case is the curved sword worn by Wellington at most of his famous engagements. Many are the relics of the peninsula campaign.

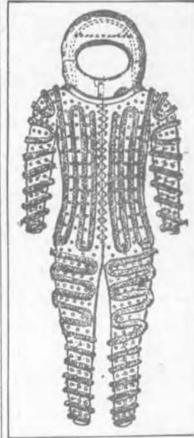

Here is the uniform, cape and hat worn by Wellington during the whole peninsula campaign, and "deposited" in the museum by his valet. On every side are guns taken from the French, while overhead are battle flags bearing the scars of honorable warfare.

And the two French soldiers viewed it all without enmity or unpleasant comment.

MAKE CANDY AT HOME

CHEAPER AND GENERALLY BET-TER THAN CAN BE BOUGHT.

Suggestions Here That Are Well Worth Making Note Of - Dipped Chocolates Among the Best-Various Ways to Prepare.

Homemade candies are cheaper than those one buys in the shops. Of course, dipped chocolates made at home cost a good deal, but even they do not cost as much as good chocolates from the shops. And homemade peanut brittle is as much cheaper, relatively, than homemade dipped chocolates as "storemade" peanut brittle is cheaper than good chocolates. An inexpensive and delicious sort of peanut brittle is made from shelled peanuts and granulated sugar. Spread the peanuts, shelled and skinned and broken in halves, in buttered pans. Melt granulated sugar and cook it until it turns brown, but do not let it burn. As soon as it is all brown, but before any of it has begun to burn, pour it over the nuts. A few drops of vinegar may be added just before removing the sugar from the fire.

Dipped chocolates are most easily made with an uncooked foundation. Break the white of an egg in a big bowl and add to it three tablespoonfuls of cream. Mix a little and add a pinch of cream tartar and confectioners' sugar enough to make a stiff cream. Then divide it into several smaller bowls and flavor each differ-

Into one pour a little very strong coffee, or coffee extract, and add enough more sugar to stiffen stiffciently to handle with a teaspoon. Then form with a teaspoon and place in little mounds on waxed paper. If you add enough confectioners' sugar to make the cream dry enough to handle with the fingers it does not taste quite so soft and creamy as when it is handled softer with a spoon.

To another batch of the fondant add some raspberry jam and form into mounds. To another add grated orange rind and a little juice. To another add essence of peppermint. To another the juice from maraschino cherries. To another chopped nuts. To another cocoa powder enough to color rich chocolate. Add enough augar always to make the cream stiff enough to handle with a spoon. A little vanilla may be added to any of the other flavorings. Stiffen some of the fondant and mold it around candied fruit and nuts and maraschino cherries drained of their juice.

Let the cream forms harden overnight in a cold place, and the next day melt the special coat chocolate sold for the purpose. Don't use it too hot. Take each form on a fork, dip it into the chocolate and slip on waxed paper to dry.

Decorate the tops of some of the chocolates with nuts and candied

STUTTERER IS TO BE PITIED

Nervousness and Inability to Put Thoughts Quickly Into Speech Responsible for Habit.

Nervousness and inability to put the thoughts quickly enough into speech are largely responsible for the stuttering habit and any child who shows a tendency to stutter should be dealt with patiently in order to discover whether it is merely a habit to be overcome or a more serious affliction, due to a lack of co-ordination between the muscles of the diaphragm and ribs where one is trying to breathe while others are endeavoring to articulate.

Teach a child to enunciate slowly and to think what he wants to say before he tries to say it. Do not startle him by ridicule or sudden interruption. Make him start fresh when he gets twisted up and frightened at his inability to get out what he is trying to say. The knowledge that one has difficulty in pronouncing certain words often produces the very stuttering that one tries to avoid.

It is tremendous mortification to a child and a serious drawback in every profession in later life, so that the confirmed stutterer is as much to be pitied as any other sufferer from infirmity, for it really is that. It usually develops in early childhood, probably from some nervous shock or fear when the youngster is in a run down condition.

Cacao Used as Currency.

Cacao passed as currency among he natives of Central and South America at the time of the European conquest, and that despite a plentiful supply of gold. Joseph Acosta, in 1610, tells us the Indians used "none of their gold or silver for traffic in or buy withall, and unto this day the custom continues among them that instead of money they use cacao." The Astecs of ancient Mexico also used "cacao" as small change, as many as 8,000 beans being counted legal tender. The ruins contained 25 rooms, but no kiva, or large ceremonial chamber, such as is usually found in similar ruins. The rangers in a brief and cursory exploration of the ruins found in plain sight ten stone axes, fourteen large stone jars, each eighteen inches high and three feet, six inches in circumference, two small jars, two parts of woven baskets, one wooden slab five inches wide, twelve inches long and one-half-inch thick, curved up at the sides; several pieces of yucca rope, one piece spliced with sinew, one piece of woven yucca fiber and several human bones.

B. PRICE - - EDITOR AND OWNER Helping the Prospector

The Nogales Chamber of Commerce held a special miners' meeting last night, to advance the mining industry in Santa Cruz county. Mechanical work ncident to the publication of a newspaper prevented the editor of The Patagonian from being present in person. To this paper this meeting has quite a lot of significance.

For over three years The Patagonian has been trying to tell the outside world of the mineral resources of Santa Cruz county, especially of the Patagonia and nearby districts. Most of the producing mines in this county, whether they are in the Patagonia mining district or not, use this place as their shipping point; therefore for newspaper purposes the designation "Patagonia district" is sufficient to cover most of the important mines and prospects of Santa Cruz county. That The Patagonian has been somewhat successful in this work is evidenced from press clippings throughout the country, in articles from this paper being reprinted in newspapers of nation-wide circulation, as well as in the State press. Other newspapers in the county have also given great publicity to mining in Santa Cruz county. That the Nogales Chamber of Commerce finally shows interest in the county's greatest industry is certainly a hopeful sign, and the assistance and co-operation of this body of business men will make the work of the newspapers much easier.

merce in advancing the mining industry of this county should be to encourage the prospector. To the prospector must first be given credit for all the glory of all the mining districts in the world.

Co-operation among men who have merce in advancing the mining industry

Co-operation among men who have mining properties, as often pointed out in The Patagonian, will help. Almost every man who has a claim has his own ideas of what the county needs, and he

Chamber of Commerce have mining properties in the Patagonia district. Would it be a violation of the proprieties to suggest to them that now, if ever, is the time to do work on their claims? It requires money to develop a prop-Department of the Interior, U.S. Land work so far, then he must get more capital to continue the work. Dozens of properties, in the Patagonia district, have been advanced to this stage. Why not form a company and finance one or more of them? Nogales has the money, Patagonia has the mines; let's show the world the ore.

The Female of the Species

The great war in Europe is bringing into the limelight some queer and forgotten corners of the world. Until the T. Bird, Raymond R. Earhart, Edward tide of battle swept up into the Balkans, L. Mix, Charles V. Fowler, all of No-not many people could have answered off-hand the question, "Is there a spot on earth where the population is confined entirely to the male of the species?" An Eveless Eden would strike most people as a pretty dull place. There is such a domain, however, on Mount Athos, near Salonika.
