Oil Flotation Mill For Three R Mine

Surveyors are at work this week at the Three R mine, to determine the location of the new 100-ton daily capacity oil flotation mill which is to be put up at that property. Ground is expected to be broken and work started on the mill within a few days. It is believed the mill will be put up right at the mine, but the question of water may enter largely into the selection of a site. The first unit is to be of 100 tons capacity and other units may be added as needed. The oil flotation process will treat only the low grade ores, shipment being made direct to the smelter of the high grade, of which thirty tons are now being shipped daily to the El Paso smelter.

The completion of the mill will enable the new owners of the Three R to develop the famous mine on a scale greater than hitherto attempted, as to this date none of the low grade ore has been treated. It will mean much to Santa Cruz county and Patagonia in particular, for the greater activity and increased payroll at the Three R the greater the prosperity of this district.

The Three R mine was recently taken over by H. C. Harrison and son, on a $500,000 deal.

W. J. Downey is making good progress with his caterpillar on the Duquesne haul. All the machinery for the electrification of the Duquesne plant will soon be on the ground and when the change to electricity is made the oil flotation mill will be enlarged a unit. On the down haul Mr. Downey is bringing sine concentrates this week.

The bill of Senator Ashurst of Arizona, appropriating $10,000 for the construction of a bridge on International avenue in Nogales, was reported favorably to the senate. He also secured the release of 600 head of cattle belonging to Messrs. McCall & Herron, of Douglas. These cattle have been held by Collector Hardy of the customs department.

A call has been issued for school bond election at Sonoita on the 10th of June. The election is for the purpose of authorizing the issuance of bonds in the amount of $3,000 for the building and furnishing of a school building in the Sonoita district.

The program for Sunday evening's motion picture show will consist of four especially interesting films, as follows: "The Shot," in two reels, "Animated Weekly Series," and a good comedy, "Tony the Wop."

When You Register Put Party Affiliation

Geo. T. Coughlin, justice of the peace for Patagonia precinct, has been appointed deputy registrar clerk by County Recorder Arcus Reddoch. It is absolutely necessary for all citizens to register again this year, therefore the quicker it is attended to the better. Electors are requested to call at the office of Mr. Coughlin and register. He will call by appointment at the home of those who are unable to come to his office. In registering, do not register as non-partisan; it may cost you your vote at the primaries. This paper believes the only correct method is to register as a Democrat and vote the Democratic ticket, but several misguided individuals in this precinct may have other political preference and they are cautioned to register under their political faith, and not as non-partisan. Registration for the Patagonia precinct will be much larger this year than ever before.

Cutting and baling the barley hay crop on the Sonoita grant and at the Patagonia Farm, the big piece of irrigated land adjoining Patagonia on the east, has been about completed this week. Sixty acres of hay have been cut on the farm and 20 acres have already been put in corn, and 60 more will be put in corn and beans.

Nick Johnson has cut 20 acres of hay adjoining the Patagonia Farm. This tract has had plenty of water to irrigate, having installed a fine pumping plant for use in case running water should get low. It is now filling a large storage reservoir.

The American Smelting & Refining company is to add a third reverberatory furnace to its plant at Hayden, Ariz., which will increase the capacity of the plant considerably. The excavating has been completed and the work on the furnace will soon be underway.

High Bred Herefords Bring Fancy Prices

The price of high bred Hereford cattle continues to go up furnishing an important lesson to the cattlemen of Arizona. Stock periodicals received here tell of recent prices paid for fancy stock that to the stockgrower unfamiliar with the trend of the business seem phenomenal.

On May 17 at Kentland, Indiana, W. T. McCray sold at auction 75 head that brought an average price of $1,285 a head. One bull out of the lot Superior Fairfax, was sold to E. L. Dana of Parkman, Wyoming, for $10,000. The top price brought by any female in the bunch sold was $4,000. On March 1 at Harris, Mo., Overton Harris at his annual auction sale sold 61 head of Hereford cattle at an average price of $1,200 a head. One yearling brought $8,000.

These are of course top notch prices but they show the trend of the high class cattle market. To the average cattlemen, the prices will undoubtedly seem high but they are sure to go much higher. The advance has been steady during the past few years. Cattlemen have become educated to a point where they realize that the better the cattle the more money is to be made from them.

Thos. Schulz, Joe Lamma, Carlos Valenzuela, Jack Price and Mr. and Mrs. Paul McIntyre formed a party of visitors to Bisbee last Sunday, being taken up in Mr. McIntyre's machine.

Quite a number of people from both Nogales and Patagonia attended the picnic near W. F. Neil's ranch in the Vaughn neighborhood Tuesday of this week.

VISITING FRIENDS IN DREAMS

English Experimenters Assert That It Can Be Done Through the Exercise of Will Power.

That a person can visit distant friends and see what they are doing, if one only wills to do so, is the statement of an English experimenter in the mystery of dreams. It is apparently a kind of "dream" telepathy, because to carry it out successfully both parties must be willing to receive or to transmit the message. Curious enough, who is to be the transmitter and who is to be the receiver can only be decided when the experiment is carried out. The following is an example of the strange means of communication which was carried out as an experiment:

The experimenters were a lady and a gentleman. They were friends, but not in any way related, nor were they lovers. The man lived in London and was a bachelor; the lady in Liverpool. They mutually agreed that on a certain night, at a given hour, they would try to see in sleep what the other was doing and what were the surroundings of each. The man went to sleep in London, as usual, and dreamed not at all, although trying to do so. In the morning he decided that the experiment had failed.

What was his surprise, however, to get a letter from his friend in Liverpool the following day, in which she gave an account of all his acts before he went to bed, and described his room accurately, even to the detail of a brown, well-worn carpet being mended with a bit of scarlet felt. She had never been in his rooms nor heard what they were like, yet she was able in a dream to see in Liverpool what he was doing in London. How it was that she could see when he could not, has yet to be discovered.

This dream sight would be of much comfort at the present time when one longs to know if the dear ones at the war are safe, and doubtless the soldiers would be cheered by a vision of those at home. Thus telepathic dreaming might be worth while cultivating; but to be successful it must be quite natural. The will power must be under the complete control of the sleeper, and not interfered with by any outside intelligences, and both parties must arrange the hour they intend to put the experiment into practice.

HER GAIN.

"Does your husband remember your wedding anniversary?"
"No; so I remind him of it in January and June, and get two presents."

Those Queer Men.

Mrs. Exo—I never have a bit of trouble with my husband over the matter of dress.

Mrs. Ywo—I do with mine. When I get a gown that he likes he doesn't like the bill, and when the bill suits him he doesn't care for the gown.

Valued the Dog.

Mrs. Youngwedd—And how long must you be away, dearest?
Youngwedd—About two weeks.

Mrs. Y.—Well, I think I'll learn to cook while you are absent.

Y.—That's a good idea. And I'll take the dog over and leave him with one of the neighbors.

A Preserver.

"How shall we preserve the forests?" said the worried woodsman.
"Leave it to my wife," replied the town idler. "A woman who can preserve green tomatoes and watermelon rinds oughtn't to be baffled by a few trees."

Interested.

"Any political excitement in town these days?" asked the visitor.
"About 27 prominent citizens seem to be considerably excited, but everybody else is calm and peaceful," replied the old resident.

"Why are the 27 prominent citizens so excited?"
"They are candidates for office."

As He Understood It.

"Did you read that article in yesterday's paper headed 'A Roman Licetor?'" asked Brown of his friend Green.

"No," replied Green, whose historic knowledge is limited. "I never read such nonsense, I suppose, however, the woman in the case described as licking the Roman wouldn't have licked her. Did she have him arrested?"

HAS HIS OWN PREFERENCE

Native of India Objects to the Flute, but Delights in Playing the Vina.

I had thought China was a queer place and that the Chinese had queer customs, but China can't entertain on the same afternoon with India, Homer Crox writes in Leslie's. If someone had told me about their manners and customs before I got to India I would have laughed courteously and set him down in my little book. There are some things that a Hindu will do and some that he will not do; work is placed prominently on the latter list. One thing that a Hindu will not do is to play the flute. He would rather go to a flogging post than dash off a selection on a flute. But he will play a stringed instrument, called a vina, similar to the instrument played by David in the tent of Saul. This instrument looks as if it had originally been intended as a carpet stretcher, but had fallen into the hands of a musically inclined person who had borrowed a couple of piano wires and was determined to lower rents. After hearing an able-bodied Hindu pick on an instrument of this kind one can't help wishing that they would put it in the same class with the flute. A Hindu's idea of music is to make all the noise he can. He doesn't care anything about rhyme or rhythm; all his energy is expended in volume. Hindu musicians are all large, splendidly muscled fellows, who play as if they were going to gymnasium regularly. When one hears them playing on a vina one can't help wondering how David ever came to make such an impression on Saul.

USE FOR THE BELGIAN HARE

Little Animal May Be Made an Exceedingly Valuable Source of Food Supply.

The Belgian hare is one of the best rabbits for table use. It weighs more than most breeds, develops very rapidly, and the quality of the meat is superior to all the others. The Flemish giant is a Belgian hare bred exclusively for large size, but with the result that the meat is coarser and less delicate in flavor. These characteristics are regarded by some persons as desirable, but this is largely a matter of individual taste. Most people would prefer the white, finer-grained flesh of the original Belgian hare. It should be remarked, however, that much of the excellence of the rabbit as food depends upon its cooking. As often prepared, it is dry and insipid; while in the hands of an experienced cook it becomes all that the most fastidious taste can wish. An especial requirement in cooking the Belgian hare is that none of the natural juices of the meat be lost in the process.

Fringes of the Fleet.

Recently Rudyard Kipling visited the fringes of the great battle fleet, the Unities, Claribels, Stormcocks, once humble trawlers, now "On His Majesty's Service" and proud of their new positions; the E-1's, E-2's, E-3's, hog-backed submarines, and the long, low destroyers, the spies of the sea and always in closest touch with the enemy.

It is this fleet that keeps watch for submarines, sweeps channels clear of mines, patrols the coast for enemy cruisers.

It keeps the sea in all weather, scorns "Fritz's" hidden dangers, traps his unwary U-boats. It is unheralded work, dangerous, but well done. Thanks to it, the great commerce of England goes on almost unmolested.

In "The Fringes of the Fleet," a small volume similar to his "France at War," Mr. Kipling now describes the work of this heterogeneous but picturesque fleet.

Complex Melting Pot.

Hawaii's extraordinary complexity of races, brought about by induced immigration to meet the economic needs of the planters, makes the islands most interesting for study of problems of state, education and religion. Just as on the mainland, recently, some of the more perplexing phases of contiguity of persons of varied culture have been apparent, so in the Pacific outpost it is becoming necessary to know just how far there is unification and loyalty to a distinctly American ideal. There are 92,000 Japanese in the islands. If adults among them seek naturalization, as one now does with consistency, will they be admitted? So recognized, would they be welcomed to California? What would Japan consider the status of such men to be, Japanese or American?—Christian Science Monitor.

Bright Boy.

Her Father—So you want to marry my daughter, eh?
Her Suitor—That's the idea.
Her Father—What are you going to live on?
Her Suitor—I was thinking about living on you.

SYNOPSIS.

Cazalet, on the steamer Kaiser Fritz, homeward bound from Australia, arises out in his sleep that Henry Craven, who ten years before had ruined his father and himself, is dead and finds that Hilton Toye, who shares the stateroom with him, knows Craven and also Blanche Macnair, a former neighbor and playmate. When the daily papers come aboard at Southampton Toye reads that Craven has been murdered and calls Cazalet's dream second sight. He thinks of doing a little amateur detective work on the case himself. In the train to town they discuss the murder, which was committed at Cazalet's old home. Toye hears from Cazalet that Scruton, who had been Craven's friend and the scapegoat for Craven's dishonesty, has been released from prison. Cazalet goes down the river and meets Blanche.

CHAPTER V—Continued.

He had floundered to his feet as well. He was standing over her, feeling his way like a great fatuous coward, so some might have thought. But it really looked as though Blanche was not attending to what he did say; yet neither was she watching her little anglers stamped in jet upon the silvery stream, nor even seeing any more of Nelly Potts in the Australian veranda. She had come home from Australia, and come in from the river, and she was watching the open door at the other end of the old schoolroom, listening to those confounded steps coming nearer and nearer—and Cazalet was gazing at her as though he really had said something that deserved an answer.

"Why, Miss Blanche!" cried a voice. "And your old lady-in-waiting figured I should find you down!"

Hilton Toye was already a landman and a Londoner from top to toe. He was perfectly dressed—for Bond Street—and his native simplicity of bearing and address placed him as surely and firmly in the present picture. He did not look the least bit out of it. But Cazalet did, in an instant; his old bush clothes changed at once into a merely shabby suit of despicable cut; the romance dropped out of them and their wearer, as he stood like a trussed turkey-cock, and watched a bunch of thirsk-flowers presented to the lady with a little gem of a natural, courteous, and yet characteristically racy speech.

To the lady, mark you; for she was one, on the spot; and Cazalet was a man again, and making a mighty effort to behave himself because the hour of boy and girl was over.

"Mr. Cazalet," said Toye, "I guess you want to know what in thunder I'm doing on your tracks so soon. It's hog-luck, sir, because I wanted to see you quite a lot, but I never thought I'd strike you right here. Did you hear the news?"

"No! What?"

There was no need to inquire as to the class of news; the immediate past had come back with Toye into Cazalet's life; and even in Blanche's presence, even in her schoolroom, the old days had flown into their proper place and size in the perspective.

"They've made an arrest," said Toye; and Cazalet nodded as though he was one!

"Give me time," said Toye, laughing. "I may come along that way yet."

Cazalet faced him in a frame of tangled greenery. "You told me you wouldn't!"

"I did, sir, but that was before they put salt on this poor old crook. If you're right, and he's not the man, shouldn't you say that rather altered the situation?"

CHAPTER VI.

Voluntary Service.

"And why do you think he can't have done it?"

Cazalet had trundled the old canoe over the rollers, and Blanche was hardly paddling in the glassy strip alongside the weir. Below the lock there had been something to do, and Blanche had done it deftly and silently, with almost equal capacity and grace. It had given her a charming flush and sparkle; and, what with the sun's bare hand on her yellow hair, she now looked even bonnier than indoors, yet not quite, quite such a girl. But then every bit of the boy had gone out of Cazalet. So that hour stolen from the past was up forever.

"Why do the police think the other thing?" he retorted. "What have they got to go on? That's what I want to know. I agree with Toye in one thing. Blanche looked up quickly. "I wouldn't trust old Savage an inch. I've been thinking about him and his previous evidence. Do you realize that it's quite dark now soon after seven? It was pretty thick saying his man was bareheaded, with neither hat nor cap left behind to prove it! Yet now it seems he's put a beard to him, and next we shall have the color of his eyes!"

Blanche laughed at his vigor of phrase; this was more like the old, hot-tempered, sometimes rather overbearing Sweep. Something had made him jump to the conclusion that Scruton could not possibly have killed Mr. Craven, whatever else he might have done in days gone by. So it simply was impossible, and anybody who took the other side would have to reckon henceforth with Sweep Cazalet.

Mr. Toye already had reckoned with him, in a little debate begun outside the old summer schoolroom at Littleford, and adjourned rather than finished at the iron gate into the road. In her heart of hearts Blanche could not say that Cazalet had the best of the argument. Toye had advanced a general principle with calm ability, but Cazalet could not be shifted from the particular position he was so eager to defend, and would only enter into abstract questions to beg them out of hand.

Blanche rather thought that neither quite understood what the other meant; but she could not blink the fact that the old friend had neither the dialectical mind nor the unflinching courtesy of the new. That being so, with her perception she might have changed the subject; but she could see that Cazalet was thinking of nothing else; and no wonder, since they were approaching the scene of the tragedy and his own old home, with each long dip of her paddle.

It had been his own wish to start upstream; but she could see the wistful pain in his eyes as they fell once more upon the red turrets and the smooth green lawn of Uplands; and she neither spoke nor looked at him again until he spoke to her.

"I see they've got the blinds down still," he said detachedly. "What's happened to Mrs. Craven?"

"I hear she went into a nursing home before the funeral."

"I expect we should find Savage somewhere. Would you very much mind, Blanche? I should rather like—if it was just setting foot—with you—"

He Clutched Her Hand, but Only as He Might Have Clutched a Man's.

But even that effective final pronoun failed to bring any buoyancy back into his voice; for it was not in the least effective as he said it, and he no longer looked her in the face. But this all seemed natural to Blanche, in the manifold and overlapping circumstances of the case. She made for the inlet at the upper end of the lawn. And her prompt unquestioning acquiescence shamed Cazalet into further and franker explanation, before he could let her hand to please him.

"You don't know how I feel this!" he exclaimed quite miserably. "I mean about poor old Scruton; he's gone through so much as it is, whatever he may have done to deserve it long ago. Is it conceivable that he should go and do a thing like this the very moment he gets out? I ask you, is it even conceivable?"

Blanche understood him. And now she showed herself golden to the core, almost as an earnest of her fitness for the free before her.

"Poor fellow," she cried, "he has a friend in you, at any rate! And I'll help you to help him, if there's any way I can."

He clutched her hand, but only as he might have clutched a man's.

"You can't do anything; but I won't forget that," he almost choked. "I meant to stand by him in a very different way. He'd been down to the depths, and I'd come up a bit; then he was good to me as a lad, and it was my father's partner who was the ruin of him. I seemed to owe him something, and now—now I'll stand by him whatever happens and—whatever has happened!"

Then they landed in the old, old inlet. Cazalet knew every knot in the post to which he tied Blanche's canoe.

It was a very different place, this Uplands, from poor old Littleford on the lower reach. The grounds were five or six acres instead of about one, and a house in quite another class stood farther back from the river and very much farther from the road.

The inlet began the western boundary, which continued past the boat-house in the shape of a high hedge, a herbaceous border (not what it had been in the old days), and a gravel path. This path was screened from the lawn by a bank of rhododendrons, as of course were the back yard and kitchen premises, past which it led into the front garden, eventually debouching into the drive. It was the path along which Cazalet led the way this afternoon, and Blanche at his heels was so struck by something that she could not help telling him he knew his way very well.

Diplomacy.

"Look here, Charlie," said one young undergrad to another, who had been asked to run his eye over a letter which his friend had written to his father, in which there was the inevitable request for money, "you've spelled jug, e-u-g!" "I know," said Charlie; "but you see I need the cash, and don't want the old man to think I'm putting on airs. That's how he spells it."

HIS HAND RESTORED

Chicago Youth Saved to Life of Usefulness.

Operation Performed by Celebrated Surgeon is Considered One of the Most Remarkable of Which There Is Any Record.

A young man who had been severely burned by an explosion of gasoline went to Dr. John B. Murphy at Mercy Hospital in Chicago to see if his hands could be made useful again. So badly burned were they that their backs were a mass of hard scar tissue, which caused the fingers to retract and made it impossible to bend the fingers close to the hand.

In the December number of the "Clinics of John B. Murphy" is an account of the extraordinary skin grafting operation by which Doctor Murphy restored power to the right hand. First he cut away all the scar tissue from the back of the hand right down to the sheaths of the tendons. Then he prepared a skin graft in the following way: He cut two deep slits in the skin and fat of the left side of the chest and abdomen, beginning about an inch below the nipple. He cut right down to the sheath of the rectus muscle, so as to include in the flap as much fat as possible, remarking to his students that it would be a failure unless plenty of fat was included. He brought the edges of the skin together underneath the flap and sewed them, leaving the flap like a bridge.

He inserted the patient's hand under this bridge, with the palm against the abdomen and the raw surface of the back in contact with the under surface of the flap, and sewed the edges of the skin of the hand wound to the edges of the skin of the flap.

He fastened the arm to the body with strips of adhesive plaster so that the patient could not move it. The wound was covered with plain sterile cotton so as to prevent infection.

Three weeks later it was found that the graft had taken perfectly. It was then cut away from the body and the patient was discharged, with instructions to return in about eight months, when Doctor Murphy intends to perform another operation—elongating the tendons, which have contracted. The left hand is to be treated in a similar way.

Seven Joys of Reading.

In "The Seven Joys of Reading," Mary Wright Plummer, principal of the Library school, New York public library, names the joy of familiarity first of all.

"The joy of familiarity comes not alone from novels and poems. You can turn at the right moment—and there are mental as well as physical settings for such enjoyments to many an essay the pages of which show that that is where the book has been opened most often.

"Don't say that you have not, more times than one, on a cold winter Sunday when dinner is later than usual, used 'The Dissertation on Roast Pig' as an appetizer. Or that you have not found satisfaction for an oft-recurring mood of wanting you know not what in some perfect piece of writing such as Pater's 'Child in the House.' Or that, feeling limp and languid, you have not, time and again, breathed in Emerson's 'Self-Reliance' like a draft of salt sea air."

Grieves for Dead Horse.

Her grief over a dead horse which she saw in East Thirty-fourth street cost a woman, who said she was Miss Mary Eliot, a trip to police station. The policeman who made the arrest thought the mourning was a menace to traffic, as it caused a crowd to collect.

Miss Eliot explained she entertained a great affection for horses, and declared she was merely "trying to find the pulse of the dead horse" in the hope of finding traces of life.

Captain Sexton, who was in charge of the desk at the police station when she was brought in, said he had a similar feeling of pity for dumb beasts, but said that such sentiment could not be permitted to obstruct traffic in the streets. However, the woman was discharged.—New York Dispatch Philadelphia North American.

The Irony of Fate.

"Alas!" sighed the long-haired passenger, "how little we know of the future and what it has in store for us."

"That's right," rejoined the man with the moth-eaten whiskers in the seat opposite. "Little did I think when I carved my initials on the rude desk in the little red schoolhouse some forty years ago that I would some day grow up and fall to become famous."
