Alto-Salero District Is Showing Activity

J. M. Orosco has given a bond and lease on the Black Hill mine to Messrs. Ray and Abbott of Tucson, who have had a lease on the Mineral Hill mine in the Twin Buttes district, but owing to the boom on there have not been able to renew their lease on satisfactory terms. It is possible that a bond may be made on the Bonanza by the same parties,

The showing on the Black Hill is a good one. In a 70 foot shaft sunk two years ago there is reported by Mr. Orosco to be good copper ore. The lessees have started work with about a dozen men in three shifts, driving the lower tunnel started by the former owners, which will be run under the bottom of the shaft and give a total depth on the hill when completed of 250 feet or more. The lessees have already put the wagon road from Bond's house at Alto to the mine in perfect shape, and when the county does its work on the county road from Tubac to Patagonia there will be good traveling in both directions.

The Holt brothers and Kaiser have commenced work on the Wandering Jew mine with a crew of Mexicans. As there is ore in sight to start off on, a great deal is expected of this work. This property has shipped years ago, and it is hoped that shipments will begin again

NO GROUND FOR SCANDAL

Though for a Time the Domestic Peace of the Deary Family Was Seriously Threatened.

A young married woman, whose husband was of an exceedingly jealous disposition, decided to have her dining room repapered, and telephoned to the nearest paperhanger to send one of his men with samples to her home that afternoon.

Promptly at four o'clock the man appeared with the usual large sample book, and Mrs. Newlywed ushered him into the dining room, as she thought the paper could best be decided upon when tried against the wall.

"No, I don't like that brown, Mr. Paperhanger. Try the buff," she said. Then, "No, Mr. Paperhanger, the figure is too large in that; let me see that dark blue! Yes, I like that, don't you, Mr. Paperhanger?"

"Yes, madam, that looks very well, but don't call me Mr. Paperhanger, that isn't my name." "Oh, pardon me, but what is you name?" Mrs. Newlywed asked.

"My name is Love," the paperhanger answered, when Mrs. Newlywed began to laugh. Yes, Love," the paperhanger repeated, somewhat nettled by the lady's laughter. Then she straightened her face and was about to speak, when her husband strode into the room, with fire in his eyes.

"Get out of here, you infamous rascall" he thundered, shaking his fist in the paperhanger's face. "Get out before I throw you out."

"What's the matter with you?" the paperhanger snarled. "What have I

"Done? Ask me what you have done! Here I just come home from a hard day's work and find you making love to my wife, and then you ask me what you have done!"

'Why, man, you're crazy! Why should I make love to your wife when have one of my own? Your wife asked me what my name was, and I told her. W. E. Love. Now what have you to say?" and the paperhanger straightened up ready for what might happen next, when Mrs. Newlywed said: "Oh, Harry, don't act so! The man is telling the truth and I the carpenters objected, and the plan was laughing when you came in at the idea of having Love and Deary under the same roof."

This time the paperhanger looked mystified, when Mrs. Newlywed ex-"Our name is Deary, Mr. plained: Love; this is my husband, H. O.

KNOW WHERE TO FIND THEM War Authorities Keep Effective Track

of All the Soldiers Under Their Control.

It is doubtful whether any foreign war office follows with an accuracy greater than that displayed by the United States war department the movements of its officers. The following is an interesting case in point:

A young army officer who had seen service in this country and in the East was once with a small scouting party in Arizona. After two weeks in the desert his squad came to the railway near a small station. Within ten minutes a telegram from Washington dran, and the children belong equally was brought to him by the station to the man and woman, and are their agent. It asked if the officer wished joint responsibility. to be transferred to one of the new artillery regiments then forming.

He answered by telegraph that he would be glad to enter either of them. Then with his squad he set off again across the desert.

It was six days later when they again struck the railway, this time 80 miles from the point at which they had previously crossed it, but the officer's reply from the war department was awaiting him. It had been telegraphed to every station within two hundred miles.

A more striking instance of accuracy occurred after the same officer's transfer to the East. He was traveling home on leave and, as the regulations require, had notified the department of the day, hour and probable route of his journey. After he had been on the train for eight hours at a small station the conductor entered Styria. The western Stav family is with a telegram, asking if anyone of divided into the Poles, in Russia, Aushis name was on board. On opening tria and Prussia, and the Kassubes; the telegram the officer found that it the Czechs, or Bohemians, and the ordered him to detached duty.

Exactness of detail could not be carried much further. The war department knew the whereabouts of a second lieutenant even when he was traveling on leave of absence.

Division of Races.

The division of the earth's population according to race is as follows: Indo-Germanic or Aryan race (white), occupying Europe, America, Persia, India and Austria, about 775,000,000; Mongolian or Turanian (yellow and brown), living in Asia, about 682,000, 000; Semitic (white), living in Asia, Arabia, etc., about 65 000,000; negro and Bantu (black), found in Africa, about 150,000,000; Malay and Polynesian (brown), inhabiting Australia, about 35,000,000; American Indian (red), found in North and South America, number, including haifbreeds, about 25,000,000.

Kentucky Orator Hard to Corner, as Frankfort Belle Found Out to Her Great Discomfort.

Tom Marshall of Kentucky, who flourished as an orator and wit in the last century, was a gallant gentleman who, opportunity offering, distributed his osculatory activities without regard to age, race or previous condition of servitude. On Christmas eve he met in the hall the pretty octoroon slave maid of Miss Breckenridge, a society leader and belle. Tom kissed her and she was so responsive and he so liberal that he expressed his appreciation by giving her what he supposed was a $20 gold piece. In fact, it was a gold medal that had been presented to him by the citizens of Frankfort, Ky., for some services rendered to that burg. The girl tried to change it, when the storekeeper, supposing it to be stolen, impounded it and gave it to her mistress. The girl being called to account admitted that it was a Christmas gift from Mr. Marshall and confessed that the hall was dark and that Tom kissed her before she could help

Miss Breckenridge determined to give Mr. Marshall a lesson in good manners, so that evening at a brilliant social function she assembled half a dozen Louisiana belles about her and, calling Tom to the group, handed him the medal and said: "Mr. Marshall, here is something you parted with in the dark. It is restored to you in the light." Tom replied promptly: "It was dark, sure enough, but believe me, Miss Breckenridge, if I had known it was you I wouldn't have given you a cent.

BEAUTY NOT AT FIRST SEEN

Makers of Furniture Were Slow to Recognize the Supreme Worth of Mahogany Wood,

Like the use of a great many of the factors connected with the arts and the sciences, the discovery of the beauty of the grain of mahogany for furniture was accidental, says a London contemporary. The story goes that a certain West Indian captain who had brought back to England some planks of mabogany as ballast, decided to give the wood to his brother, a Doctor Gibbons, then building a house on King street, Covent Garden. But the planks were so hard that for using them fell through.

Some time later Mrs. Gibbons wanted a small box made, and the doctor sent the mahogany to a cabinetmaker. In his turn the cabinetmaker objected to the hardness of the wood, but the doctor persisted so much in his request that the order was finally exacuted.

The finished box polished so nicely that the docter ordered a bureau made of the same wood. The cabinetmaker displayed that in his shop window before delivering it. The duchess of Buckingham saw it and begged enough wood from the doctor to have it duplicated, and mahogany furniture soon after came into favor.

Home Partnership.

in the United States believes that every woman should be brought up to earn her own living, if necessary, but adds: "I am not willing to say that a wife and mother in a home does not earn hers. I believe that in most cases she does. The average marriage is a partnership, in which the wife does her share in keeping up the home and caring in it for the chil-

"I certainly do want women to have all their rights. What I look forward to is the day when no woman shall be at a disadvantage, because of her sex, and when no woman shall be able to take an unfair advantage because of it. Both conditions exist today, and each is a necessary corollary of the other."

Races of the World.

The Slavs are one of the chief divisions of the Aryan race. They are divided, as a race, into two leading families, the eastern and western Slavs. The eastern Slavs comprise the Russians (Great Britaius, Little Russians and White Aussians); Bulgarians, Serbo-Croats, including the Ser-Mans and Montenegrips; and Slovenes in Carinthia, Carniola, and part of Moravians, with the Slovaks in Hungary; and the Lusacian Wends or Sarbs in Saxony and Prussia. The theory is that their original home was in Volhynia and Whele Russia.

Walnut Oil.

In France the cheap walnuts are used for their oil, acd 100 pounds of walnuts average about eighteen pounds of oir. Walnut oil is used in France more than of:ve oil, but is not manufactured at all in the United States.

Le Comte de Sabron, captain of French savairy, takes to his quarters to raise by hand a motherless Irish terrier pup, and names it Pitchoune. He dines with the Marquise d'Esclignac and moets Miss Julia Redmond, American heiress, who sings for him an English ballad that lingers in his memory. Sabron is ordered to Aiglers, but is not allowed to take servants or dogs. Miss Redmond offers to take care of the dog during his master's absence, but Pitchoune, homesick for his master, runs away from her. The Marquise plans to marry Julia to the Duo de Tremont. Unknown to Sabron, Pitchoune follows him to Aiglers. Dog and master meet and Sabron gets permission from the war minister to keep his dog with him. Julia writes him that Pitchoune has run away from her. He writes Julia of Pitchoune. The Duo de Tremont finds the American heiress capricious. A newspaper report that Sabron is among the missing after an engagement with the natives causes Julia to confess to her aunt that she loves him. Sabron, wounded in an engagement, falls into the dry bed of a river, and is watched over by Pitchoune leaves him. Julia goes in search of Sabron, reported missing. Tremont takes Julia and the Marquise to Aiglers in his yacht, not knowing their errand. Le Comte de Sabron, captain of French

With his godmother he was entirely at ease. Ever since she had paid his trifling debts when he was a young man, he had adored her. Tremont, always discreet and almost in love with his godmother, kept her in a state of great good humor always, and when she had suggested to him this little party he had been delighted. In speaking over the telephone the Marguise d'Esclignac had said very firmly:

"My dear Robert, you understand that this excursion engages you to nothing."

"By all means, any one you like," said his godmother diplomatically. "We want to sail the day after tomorrow." She felt safe, knowing that no worldly people would accept an invitation on twenty-four hours

"So," the Duc de Tremont reflected, as he hung up the receiver, "Miss Redmond has a scheme, a mission! Young girls do not have schemes and missions in good French society."

"Mademoiselle," he said to her, as they walked up and down on the deck in the pale sunset, in front of the chair of the Marquise d'Esclignac, "I never saw an ornament more becoming to a woman than the one you wear."

"Why do you think of Algiers as a field for nursing the sick, Mademoiselle?"

"There has been quite a deputation of the Red Cross women lately going from Paris to the East."

He thought her very charming, both romantic and idealistic. She would make a delightful friend. Would she not be too intense for a wife? However, many women of fashion joined the Red Cross. Tremont was a commonplace man, conventional in his heart and in his tastes.

YOUTH OF BASEBALL

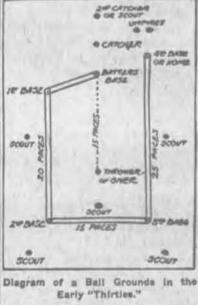

Before Game Had Attained Its Present Perfection.

Sport in the "Thirties" Was by No Means What It is Today, Though Doubtless It Was as Generally Enjoyed.

Back as far as the thirties of the ast century-probably even further back-certain localities called the grand old game of today, baseball, by the name we do now. The rules of the pastime have undergone many changes, although some of the rules today are the same as those in the first set got up by the Knickerbocker club in 1845. Fourteen rules comprised the first set, as compared to the hundred or more of today, to say nothing of the many sections of the different rules.

The following is a description of "Massachusetts Baseball" as played on the Boston common in the early thirties:

The number of players on a side might vary from six to twenty, but eight was the regulation number. The field was an irregular polygon. There were really five bases, for the home base and the batter's base were not coincident. The ball was made of any soft and elastic material, such as wound yard, a sturgeon's nose, and later, hollow rubber. The pitcherknown as the "thrower" or "giver"stood midway of the polygon. The catcher stood up close behind the bat, but he had a "scout" to assist him, since this game, like cricket, made no distinction between fair and foul balls-anything off the bat was a hit. There were no basemen, for a runner off base was put out-just as in rounders-by being hit with the ball. Five scouts assisted in fielding balls and "soaking" the runner. Hence the soft ball. A ball caught off the bat or on first bound was out. Even after real baseball came this game had long survived.

Then afterward there came an evolution of baseball in New York. One-"You are very beautiful," said the o-cat, two-o-cat and three-o-cat were Duc de Tremont to Miss Redmond, as the most popular kinds of baseball inshe leaned on the balcony of the villa. dulged in by the New York boys un-The bougainvilles leaned against her til 1840, when one-o-cat became the breast. "When you stood in the hosfad. One summer afternoon in 1842, pital under the window and sang to as the boys were playing around the the poor devils, you looked like an famous Murray Hill grounds in New York city, Alex J. Cartwright happened along and told the youngsters he had a better game than the one-ocat affair. The boys were willing to man enthusiastically, "couldn't you find out what the new contest was and see by their faces? One poor devil at once proceeded to ask Mr. Cartwright about it.

Mr. Cartwright scratched off the diamond in the Murray Hill dust with a stick and the boys watched with open eyes and listened with open ears as he laid off the diamend, using stones for the bases and home plate. He set a player at each base and three scouts, as they were called then, in the outfield. So with eight players on a side, no shortstop, the New York lads played their first real game of baneball.

It was a matter of ten years afterward before "Dicky" Pearce made the position of shortstop a regular place on a ball team, Pearce's ability to get infield grounders and his throwing arm giving him the honor. The yarn ball then gave way to a heavier and larger ball than the one used today. The ball at that time cost two dollars. The "pill" was covered with sheepskin, the cover being sewed on in four sections by the village shoemaker. The Knickerbocker club was the first ball club to be formed and held the honor of being the only one of its kind until the Gothams put in their ally small machine, which they call appearance.

Back to Colonial Days.

The announcement that a certain section of Philadelphia is to be paved with cobblestones will, no doubt, be received with joy by jesters in other cities, but when it is known that this his target at a height to 5,000 feet. is merely one of the details in restoring the colonial atmosphere to the grounds surrounding Independence hall, residents of the Quaker City will give a sigh of relief. The hall itself was restored years ago, and a committee of the Philadelphia chapter of the American Institute of Architects appointed for the "preservation of 'istorical monuments,' has undertaken to restore the exterior of the famous building to the exact condition-or as near so as possiblethat existed when the fathers met to promulgate the Declaration of Independence.-Philadelphia Inquirer, Typewriting While Asleep, When I first began typewriting and stenography," a stenographer was telling a girl beginner, "I found myself taking stenographic notes in my head. I've dreamed many a time of picking out letters and lines of letters on the typewriter. Next a typewriter began following me in my waking moments. When scmebody talked to me or I heard someone talking I found myself taking it down on a typewriter in my brain as I might on a real typewriter from dictation. And when I found myself far behind, why, I stopped right there and made a fresh start on the talk from that moment. And in the same way I would take stenographic notes in my brain." "That is just my experience, too," said the beginner. "Hard work, this learning to be a typewriter and stenographer. but there's fun in it; though I shall be glad when it gets through following me in my waking hours and haunting toe in my dreams."

WHEN THE

APPETITE IS POOR DIGESTION BAD LIVER LAZY dividual effort. BOWELS CLOGGED

ORATES THE ENTIRE SYSTEM all a farm;" his princely possession of a century past is already given.

Humble pie is still met with in the seal districts of England, Scotland and Ireland. It is not merely the proverbial dish which the proud must metimes eat. Originally it was a meat or game ple made for the servanus of noblemen and furnished an appetizing and economical method of utilizing the less desirable parts of animals brought in from the chase.

After a prolonged and successful hunt a prodigious humble pie was made sufficient for all the retainers of the estate. This was eaten in the great kitchen after the nobleman and his guests had enjoyed the choicer portions. The pastry used for this huge pie was originally made from the drippings from the roasts of venison or game, which increased the savory flavor of the finished dish.

The modern humble pie can be baked in a deep fireproof pudding dish of a size to meet the needs of the family. Line the dish with plain crust and place large pieces of raw potato here and there, so that the crust shall be weighted down and not lose its shape while baking. When partly cooked remove from the oven, take out the pieces of raw potato and fill with a hot mixture of whatever material is at hand, such as remnants of cooked veal, beef, liver, ham or fowl, enriched with bits of finely chopped suet, highly seasoned with onion juice, minced parsley, pepper and salt, and moistened with gravy and broth, Stale bread, cut in dice, cubes of potato or other cooked vegetable may be added if the supply of meat is scant. Smooth the top of the filling neatly, arrange strips of crust in lattice fashion and return to the oven until the top is well browned. This dish somewhat resembles the economical shepherd's pie, which is topped with mashed potato instead of crust, and which does not have anything between the meat filling and the fireproof dish.

Either of these dishes makes a earty meal if served with gravy or tomato sauce and affords an economical and easy method of utilizing leftovers of meat or vegetables. Where Irish stew is left from a previous meal this will be found a good filling for a humble pie.

For Hot Biscult.

Any hostess who prides herself on her delicious biscuit should not fail to keep them tasty by having them covered during the meal, so that they will retain the heat. An attractive cover can be made of white linen having a square center and four pointed ends. On one of the pointed pieces two biscuit might be embroidered. To make the design more realistic you can tint the biscuits brown and then outline the edges of them. Or, in place of using the design, em-broider the words "Hot Biscuit" on the linen. Have such a cover ready for the next plate of hot biscuit you serve to your friends and enjoy the praise you will receive for your needlework and your culinary ability.

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspa-per Syndicate.) Jack Fenby came into the dining room waving a telegram at his assembled family. "Guess who is coming tonight," he challenged.

'Isabella Drew," hazarded Betty, with sisterly devotion.

"Oh, pshaw!" blushed Jack. "I didn't mean Isabella."

"Well, she is coming," went on Betty, smoothly. "Father and mother are going to town on the 8:42 to stay over night and I've telephoned Isabella to spend the night with me there. I'm such a dear, you ought to tell me about your message, Jack!" "It's from Lance Freeman," he replied.

"Lance Freeman from Panama?" "Yes. He's up here on business. He has promised to stay with me," he added proudly. "I tell you, folks, Lance is a pretty big gun down there on the isthmus, and Betty"-addressing his sister in an offensively patronizing tone-"it's a good thing you're not, the paint-and-powder sort of girl-Lance detests the whole tribe."

"In-d-e-e-d?" drawled Betty, over her toast and tea.

"Yes, indeed! He's terribly fussy about women, you know." "He must be a detestable paragon himself," murmured Betty. "Don't quarrel, children," chided Mrs. Fenby. "You must do the honors Betty, and, Jack, try to persuade Lance to make our home his headquarters while he is North. I was very fond of his mother." Mr. Fenby and his wife departed for their train and Jack accompanied them, to spend the day at his office in

Left to herself, Betty held conference with the cook and then went up to her own room, where she sat down before her dressing table and stared thoughtfully at her charming reflection in the oval mirror. What she saw there must have pleased her capricious fancy, for she smiled and nodded and sparkled at herself. At last, she changed to a street gown, and walked down to the drug store.

. . . . At six o'clock that evening Jack Fenby brought Lance Freeman home. Eliza, the trim parlor maid, wore a stunned look on her round face.

"Miss Betty is in the drawing room," she announced with a toss of her head.

Jack ushered his big, bronzed friend from the tropics into the soft lighted room where Betty and Isabella Drew were sitting before the fire.

Betty rose and came forward with outstretched hand. She saw a tall, broad-shouldered young man with keen gray eyes that seemed to probe the depths of her heart and soul and come away disappointed, finding evident relief in Isabella Drew's girlish simplicity. The newcomer's evident dismay and disapproval of her own charms-a dismay that his straightforward nature could not then conceal-struck a pang to Betty's heart.

Lance Freeman, eagerly anticipating frock, her feet incased in absurdly shallow looking in their baby stare, her face carefully powdered and rouged, eyebrows penciled, lips skillfully tinted, pearls in her ears and encircling her white throat.

A very much painted and powdered, bepearled, showy and altogether shoddy looking young woman-such was Lance Freeman's hasty estimate of his friend's sister.

Isabella Drew made a perfect foil for Betty. Jack wondered dazedly if the simplicity of Isabella's attire was studied and if she was in collusion with his mischievous sister to shock Lance Freeman.

"Betty!" he gasped indignantly. "Jack!" she warned, giving Lance a limp hand. "I am so glad to see you at last, Mr. Freeman. Jack has talked

"Mother left word that you are to make the Oaks your headquarters while you are North." "You are all most kind," murmured Lance, staring at the powdered little beauty, who smiled insipidly.

As the two young men dressed for dinner they talked of Lance's life in the Canal zone, of his brilliant prospects for the future, of Jack's first law case, which had been a triumph Hanford's Balsam of Myrrh is itself for the junior member of his father's an antiseptic, and the use of any other firm, and when Lance observed that there was a strong family likeness between Jack and his sister, Jack hastily changed the subject.

Lance was ready first and he came into Jack's room and examined the photographs on the mantelpiece. One framed portrait he regarded with narrowed eyes.

It was Betty's latest photograph, the picture of a charming, merry-eyed girl in a soft, white gown, her simply dressed hair waving away from her broad, low forehead. It was a sweet, thoughtful face, very unlike the painted, shallow countenance of the Betty he had met half an hour ago.

"Is this your other sister?" he asked curiously.

"You've met my only sister," muttered Jack glumly, "Hum!" said Lance perplexedly.

Jack glowed resentfully. "And she takes a diabolical delight in turning the tables on a fellow."

A queer gleam came into Lance's eyes, but he made no response.

During the dinner that followed, Jack devoted himself to Isabella and left Lance to Betty's tender mercies. The man from Panama had to admit that Jack's sister was clever, even brilliant, in spite of her shallow appearance, and while they conversed, chiefly about life at the isthmus, to which he was soon to return, Lance was studying Betty closely, trying to trace some likeness to the unaffected

Lance asked Betty to show him Mr.

"Perhaps your father would like one up by a trusty messenger," he offered.

Betty agreed that her father would be delighted, and then followed a delightful half hour during which she animatedly told him how her father had acquired many of his specimens, and she displayed such a knowledge of the subject and so entirely forgot the part she was playing that Lance found his heart slipping from his keeping.

They were standing near the fountain and Betty was dipping her fingers in the water, where goldfish darted to and fro.

Lance regarded her thoughtfully. "I'm wondering why you took the trouble to disguise yourself under the paint and powder of a circus woman," he remarked curiously.

"Sir!" thrilled Betty, trying to wither him with a glance, but crumpling miserably beneath his scorn. She tried to hate him for his brutal frankness, his lack of polish. "Please take me back to my brother."

"In a moment," he agreed gruffly. "I-I was hoping you'd wash your face first!" he blurted out.

"Wash my face?" stammered Betty He nodded and gave her a snowy handkerchief. "Please, do," he urged, Betty, having met her master, meekly obeyed.

She held a corner of the handkerchief under the fountain spray and scrubbed the paint and powder from face and lips and brows. When she had emerged, her perfect skin, pink authoress) I am so delighted to meet and blooming from the friction, she looked demurely at him.

"Well?" she smiled. "And please fiuff out your hair the Sketch. way it is in that lovely picture in Jack's room. There! You don't look so confoundedly sophisticated. Thank you, Miss Betty, you are a brick!" he ended enthusiastically, as she removed the earrings.

"A brick," dimpled Betty, as he tucked the damp and smeared handkerchief in his pocket. When they returned to the draw ing room Isabella was telling Jack a story that brought reluctant mirth in its train.

"Here comes the little imp now, he murmured, as she entered with Lance. "Well, Betty, I'm glad you've emerged from your war paint," he ended in a burst of brotherly frankness. "Where did you raise that black satin horror?"

"Cousin Daisy left it here last year; isn't it awful?" she confided.

Hours later, in her own room, Betty dropped her newly-purchased rouge pots into the waste-paper basket. Then she relapsed into dreamy inactivity.

"Oh, most adorable of men," she sighed at last. "I'm so glad you don't like paint and powder combined with pearls-I detest 'em myself-and even if I did like them would-but, no-I shall not tell even you"-nodding at her adorably blushing reflection in the glass-"what I am thinking about now!"

No Self-Starter. "Oh, dear!" exclaimed Mrs. Gadders. Mr. Gadders broke his arm while cranking up our automobile this morning."

"Don't worry," said her friend in a soothing tone. "A broken arm is not serious, and Mr. Gadders will soon get well."

"It isn't that," wailed Mrs. Gadders. "The news will get into the papers and then everybody will know that our, car is not a late model."

Philosophically Considered. "I wouldn't marry you if you were the last man on earth!" said the girl. "Well," replied the young man who takes everything seriously, "if I were the last man on earth I'd be mourning so many friends and relatives that I don't suppose I'd feel much like taking part in a wedding any

Sumerlans,

The Sumeriaus were members of one of the primitive races of Babylonia. They are believed to have been of non-Semitic origin and to nave been the dominant race at the earliest time of which there are any records, It was to them that the Assyrians ascribed the origin of Chaldean civilisation and writing. Another name for the race is Accadians. The Accadian language was non-Semitic and possibly Ural-Altaic. It was spoken previously to the better known Semitic dialect of the cuneiform inscriptions. The Sumerian seems to be a kindred dislect and to have been in use at the came time in Babylonia.
