CHANDLER MAN FINED $20 FOR KILLING DOE

Tucson, Oct. 12.—A. A. Wood of Chandler saw a deer stirring in the brush and shot it, then discovered it was a doe. He brought the carcass to town, cheerfully paid a $20 fine and turned the meat over to a charitable institution.

From other points come tales of slaughter of cattle by inexperienced hunters, while at least one hunter has returned with a rifle bullet hole through his cap.

Statement is made that half the deer meat that has been brought in has spoiled owing to the warm weather that has prevailed in southern Arizona. Suggestion is made that the season be changed to the month of November.

LAND DEVELOPMENT DISCUSSED BY A. I. C. PRESIDENT

Land development alone does not increase Arizona's wealth. It's the people who settle on the land and make it produce who add to the state's progress and prosperity and create basic wealth, declares P. G. Spilsbury, president of the Arizona Industrial Congress, in a statement in the current issue of the Arizona Business Review, issued by the congress. The statement is in connection with the colonization plan proposed by the state organization, in which co-operation of California bodies has been assured as a means of establishing closer trade relations with this state. The co-operative plan will be the subject of a conference between directors of the congress and a delegation of from 40 to 50 leading men of southern California, to be held in Phoenix the middle of next month, and in which wide interest is being taken. Regarding the plan, the statement says:

"The development of new gravity irrigation and pumping areas will not increase Arizona's wealth. These only open opportunities which if grasped and used, will eventually provide the greatest basic wealth possible in this state.

"People—good, earnest, hard-working farmers, placed on our lands, backed by our institutions, and making these lands produce to the maximum—this is our real need.

"It is estimated that Arizona can provide homes for 23,000 new citizens—farmers.

"Arizona, with only one-third the population of the city of Los Angeles, cannot afford great national advertising.

"Arizona mines, railroads and small industries control a yearly purchasing power of over 150 million dollars; the greatest portion of which goes east.

"The Arizona Industrial Congress has offered to California an economic exchange—Arizona purchasing power for aid in obtaining 23,000 new farmers.

"In four weeks new business amounting to $1,875,000 has been turned to California by Arizona industries, to show good faith.

"Thirty of the leading men in industry and banking in southern California will meet the Industrial Congress directors in November to lay plans for colonizing Arizona.

"We believe that this is the greatest economic exchange ever proposed between two great states."

A procession of chickens 100,000 miles long, laying enough eggs each year to reach from the earth to the moon and back, is something "Uncle Sam, the poultryman," can boast, according to the agricultural department at Washington. The poultry industry is pictured in motion style and gives a bird's-eye view in one reel of the poultry industry in the United States, showing commercial, farm, and backyard chicken plants.

VAUGHN NEWS

Mrs. W. H. Anderson and mother, Mrs. Harrison were county seat business visitors Tuesday.

Mrs. Fann Kjelley was taken to the Fort Huachuca hospital last Saturday, where she underwent an operation by the post surgeon. Her recovery is hoped for by her many friends.

He is to preach at the Little Adobe Church on the Hill on the fourth Sunday this month. Mr. and Mrs. George C. Sleath are the ones that made possible the erection of the church at Vaughn last year by their generous donation of funds. The people here will welcome them on their return.

Mrs. Anna Parker has purchased a new car to use in transporting children to school.

Gus Yeary has moved his road camp to Vaughn and is putting in a new road on the forest reserve, which is badly needed.

Butter the "Gold Standard" of the Farm World!

CHICAGO, Ill.—"What is there about the dairy business that puts butter on a 'gold standard' of stability and safety," asks the Research Department of the National Association of Farm Equipment Manufacturers, and then goes on to answer its own question after a year's surveying of the dairy nations of the world and the economic factors that are working towards higher production and greater profits for the farmer.

"There is less gamble in dairying as practiced by the American dairyman, for one thing," says the Research Department. "Take the feed and water supplies of the dairy cow, and they are more certain than those for any other class of live stock. The silo guarantees a feed supply whether frost cuts short the corn crop or not, and those farmers owning their own ensilage cutters and tractors or gas engines to furnish the needed power, can fill at the right time to get the best feed from the crop while saving 40 per cent more than those farmers harvesting only the ripe grain in the ear form.

"Then, there is the feed grinder, which all cow testers and state dairy leaders are urging their members and farmers to utilize to cut the cost of the grain feed rations that has been taking hundreds of millions in cash out of the dairy farmers' pockets for the freight and extra profits to those handling them after they leave the farm in coarse form. Here again the gas engine runs the home grinder, permitting the preparation of home-grown balanced rations that are at the minimum cost.

"Ventilation systems, swinging stanchions, drinking cups for each cow, feed and litter carriers and trucks, milking machines and separators, scales, machinery to provide the contented cow with low hay ration in winter, as well as other equipment, all help improve the conditions surrounding the production of milk, as well as serving to cut the production costs."

SNOW COVERS OLD BALDY

Old Baldy is covered with snow that fell last night following a two days' rainy spell. Frost also visited the higher altitudes, the San Rafael being covered this morning with a light coat of frost. It is too early for frost, as farmers are still harvesting their beans and other crops. The storm will cause great damage to the farmer at this time.

NEW COMPENSATION LAW BEST IN U. S., ASSOCIATION SAYS

New York, Oct. 16.—"Adoption by Arizona of a new workmen's accident compensation act now places this state in the front rank of American commonwealths that provide enlightened protection for but employees and employer against the hazard of industrial injuries," declares the American Association for Labor Legislation in a statement today.

"The act, which was passed by the 1925 legislature and ratified by a large majority in a popular referendum just held," the statement continued, "combines many of the best features of compensation acts in other states, including a state fund to provide workmen's accident insurance securely and economically."

The association states that, including Arizona, 18 states have already adopted state fund insurance for industrial accidents, in eight of which commercial carriers are completely barred out.

"In addition to a state fund," the statement concludes, "the Arizona act provides for the standard seven-day 'waiting period' after an injury, and a benefit scale of 6 per cent of wages, which makes it one of the most liberal laws in the country."

According to the association, only six states—Missouri, Arkansas, Mississippi, Florida, North Carolina and South Carolina—and the District of Columbia still remain without workmen's accident compensation laws. In Missouri the legislature passed a compensation bill this year, but it is held up for referendum in 1926. A bill to extend compensation to workers in private employment in the District of Columbia has been held up to congress for over three years despite strong favorable committee reports. It is favored by the American Federation of Labor, the Association for Labor Legislation and progressive employees. The opposition comes from commercial insurance agents.

MODERN WARFARE FOR RATS

Rats living about the farmyard of a home near Eureka Lake, Kas., were recently given a taste of modern warfare by a representative of the biological survey of the U. S. department of agriculture, whose time is given to rat control work and the demonstration of the best means of eliminating this pest. Such delicacies as canned salmon, apples, and fresh eggs served in the half shell, seasoned with barium carbonate, were first rationed out along the known runways and haunts of the rats. Then came a gas attack for those that had survived. A small hand duster loaded with calcium-cyanide dust was used for gassing all the burrows and hiding places. Some of the rats plunged into the dust barrage only to die at the operator's feet. A week later the gas treatment was repeated, and the premises are now reported absolutely free of rats.

AMADO TEACHER INJURED IN AUTO COLLISION

Miss Rita Maloney and her mother were injured last Monday in Tucson when their car was struck by another driven by a Mexican and overturned. Both victims were taken to a hospital in the Old Pueblo, where it was discovered that Mrs. Maloney's arm had been nearly torn off and the daughter was found to be painfully though not seriously injured.

Miss Maloney and her mother were riding with Miguel Grijalva of the Montana mine, near Ruby. The car with which they collided was driven by Lewis Facia. Both cars were badly damaged.

Miss Maloney was able to resume her duties at the Amado school Tuesday.

MAIL SERVICE DEMORALIZED IN PATAGONIA SINCE CHANGE IN R. R. SCHEDULE

Monday morning the S. P. started running a mixed train through Patagonia that makes a round trip every other day—sometimes. The train is supposed to leave Nogales at 8:02 a. m. Monday, Wednesday and Friday. So far this week it hasn't been on time any day. Monday it arrived at 8: 20, Wednesday at 8:30, and Friday at 11:00. Returning, the train is due in Patagonia at 5:10 p. m. Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday. Tuesday it arrived at 8:10, nearly three hours late; Thursday it arrived at 10:00, four and a half hours late—and Lord only knows when it will get here Saturday night.

The Southern Pacific carries the mail to Patagonia. We have had about two days' mail this week. The postmaster, H. B. Riggs, who has had the contract to deliver the mail to the train and take it from the train to the postoffice, has sent in his resignation for that job, as he would have to be on hand practically 24 hours a day to give the government service, along with his duties as postmaster. It is an outrage that the railroad company is allowed to handle the people mail with such disregard to convenience and schedule. Something should be done immediately to rectify this injustice to the citizens living along the Nogales-Benson line. We are entitled to good mail service if not good train service.

The station agent, too, is being imposed on by the railroad. Think of having to be up all hours of the night waiting for a train to come in when it is due at 5:30 p. m.—and arrives at any hour from that time till the next one is due at 8:02 a. m.

A petition should be gotten up immediately addressed to the postoffice department, asking that the mail be handled by stage between the two terminals of the road. Copies of the petition should be addressed also to Senators Ashurst and Cameron and Representative Carl Hayden, requesting them to use their influence in Washington to have the change take place immediately. The postoffice department will pay more attention to requests from our Washington representatives than they would to petitions signed by every man, woman and child living along the railroad line between Nogales and Benson. For the sake of justice, let's get busy on this matter NOW.

9500 SCHOOL CHILDREN ENROLL IN HEALTH CRUSADE

Nine thousand five hundred Arizona school children were enrolled in the Modern Health Crusade in the first 3 days of the school year. A total of 12,500 were enrolled in Arizona last year, and at least 15,000 are expected to enroll this year.

The Modern Health Crusade is one of the many health activities of the Arizona Anti-Tuberculosis Association with headquarters in the Board building, Phoenix, and branches all over the state.

The enrollment is coming in rapidly from every county in the state, great interest being manifested by the school authorities everywhere in having the pupils strive for health and for the honors awarded to those who faithfully perform the "Health Crusade."

Each pupil enrolled as a "Health Crusader" receives a "Health card" on which he enters a record of his daily health chores, including such safeguards to health and development as cleanliness, drinking plenty of water, proper eating of the right food, attention to posture and elimination, plenty of sleep, frequent bathing, and fresh clothes.

Performance of the chores for 12 weeks earns the title of "squire" and the squire's pin. The second period leads to the title and pin of "knight" in the Modern Health Crusade.

The health crusade among school children is a very important means of preventative work, and together with the many other activities of the Anti-Tuberculosis Association work is paid for out of the sale of Christmas seals each December.

It seems that nearly all ways of murdering people have been tried in Chicago; but the worst of it is that most of the may have been successful.

Nature is progressive. By the time a man develops wisdom enough to be cautious, she takes him out of the way.

How the Reform Worked

When the Union troops under Grant, early in the Civil war, took possession of West Kentucky some difficulty was encountered in controlling the populace, for that end of the state was a hotbed of southern sentiment and most of the young men had enlisted in the Confederate army. General Grant issued proclamations stating that no citizen would be molested unless he undertook to give aid and comfort to the enemy.

In one town in the invaded district, though, there was an elderly gentleman whose sympathies with the southern cause were especially outspoken. Whenever word came of a victory for the southern armies his jubilation was undisguised.

The Union provost-marshal, hearing complaints from his men of this man's actions and words, decided to make an example of him. He sent a squad to arrest the offender and presently, under guard, the old gentleman was brought before him.

"Look here," said the provost. "I'm getting tired of your behavior. Every few days I hear that you've been going about again spreading reports that our forces have been defeated and bragging about the courage of the other side. Now then, I've decided to reform you. Either you take the oath of allegiance to the Union right now or off you go to a military prison. Which shall it be?"

The prisoner decided to take the oath. After it had been administered the northern officer felt that a further admonition might be in order. "Now, then," he said, "I hope you understand what this thing means? If ever again you utter a word of disparagement for the Union cause or a word of approval for the Confederates, and I hear of it, you'll suffer severely, because now you're a loyal Unionist. And if you make a single disloyal remark you're guilty of treason."

The reclaimed one thanked him for the warning. On his way out he stopped at the door.

"Major," he said, "they ain't no law against thinkin', is they?"

"That depends," said the major. "What's in your mind now?"

"Well," said the Kentuckian, "I was just thinkin' that them Yankees certainly did give us fellers a—day before yistiddy down below the state line."

The Most Unkindest Cut of All

On the stage of a music hall in the East end of London a memory wizard with a pronounced Cockney accent was offering an exhibition of his skill. In response to questions from the audience he gave, offhand and promptly, the dates of historic events, the distance from the earth to the moon, and other facts and figures without limit.

It was quite evident from the language of some of his statements that the performer was a most patriotic Briton. Invariably when mentioning a great Englishman or a great English achievement, his voice rose exultantly.

Sitting well down in front were two Americans. They figured that the wizard must have accomplices in the house to ask him questions prepared beforehand. To find out whether or not the performer did have the powers of memory he boasted and with a view also to arousing his patriotic fervor to a still higher pitch, if possible one of the Yankees called out:

"Professor, please tell me what memorable event occurred on July the Fourth, 1776?"

Without a moment's hesitation the professor shot back his reply:

"A infernal outrage, sir!" he shouted.

Protecting the Gentler Sex

A certain young lady who gives interpretative dances in rather scanty costume was engaged to go to a staid community in New England and dance before the local dramatic and literary society.

The day after her appearance the entertainment committee—all women—held a meeting to discuss the affair of the night before. Several had been heard, when one member raised her voice.

"Personally," she said, "I enjoyed it ever so much. To me it was most artistic and symbolic and everything. But if you ask me, I must say this: It certainly was no place to take a nervous man!"

Few "Open Spaces" Left

Another West is passing. The old wild West went long ago, with its unfenced, free range and its picturesque cowboys. But now the West that succeeded it is going, too—the West of the homesteader. Free land has followed the free range into the limbo of far-off, forgotten things.

The West that is a land of fenced pastures and farms owned in fee simple subject to mortgage at 8 per cent, automobiles and golf courses. The homesteader is enmeshed in film and book. The present farmer is like his brethren in New Hampshire and Ohio.

Where will the migration-bitten younger sons go next? Will we become another Britain, exporting youth to other continents and the islands of the sea—to such, at least, of even these as have open spaces left? Whatever the answer, America is practically "full up" so far as free land is concerned.—World's Work.

SPOOF

SYNOPSIS—Lured by his four-year-old playmate, Jean Lane, Frank Hall, aged six, ventures on the forbidden wall of a dam, in a small Ontario town. He falls into the water, and is saved from possible death by clinging to Jean's outstretched arms. Next day Jean informs him that because of their adventure of the day before he is in duty bound to marry her. He agrees when they are "grownups." With Jean's brother John, also aged six, Frank begins school. Two years later they are joined by Jean and Frank's sister Marjorie. A little later Jean confides to Frank, in verse, her hope of some day becoming "Mrs. Hall." He accepts the "proposal." Frank is fourteen when his mother dies. The boys are eighteen when John's father is killed in an accident. Two years later Frank's father and John's mother are married. Disatisfied with conditions, and ambitious, the two boys make plans to go to Manitoba and "homestead," the girls agreeing to go with them. They set out. At Regina they meet "Zake," who agrees to find them satisfactory homesteads. He does so, and the two friends file claims on Sections Fourteen and Twenty-two. Jack sagely advises the adventurer in the purchase of supplies, and in a wagon drawn by a yoke of oxen, and with a cow, the four arrive at their future homes.

CHAPTER V

The morning was another gorgeous burst of sunshine. The girls were early about. As I came up from the stream where I had washed, I met Jean going down, wearing a blanket, Indian fashion, for lack of a bathrobe. A week on a dusty trail had made the presence of snow water, as deep as one wanted it, a peculiar luxury.

"Gee, but it's good to be alive!" she exclaimed, swinging her arms, to the peril of her costume. "Does one always feel like this on the prairie?"

"Always mildly intoxicated, so Zake says, but those are not his words. That's why westerners are more optimistic—and more reckless—than easterners. Always an atmosphere jag under their belts."

"Here's to Zake," she cried. "Have one with me!" as she took a great cheerful of fresh air. "See you at breakfast—if I'm sober enough!"

That day, and those that followed, were busy, busy days. The oxen were tired and footsore with their long journey, and we decided to let them rest, but Jack and I took no holiday. I was determined that on the very first day I would plant some crop on my farm, so I started at once to spade up land for a garden. By mid-afternoon I had spaded quite a sizable garden plot. Then I broke the clods as best I could and planted a few rows of potatoes. The following day I continued my digging, and that evening, with assistance from Jean and Marjorie, planted onions, carrots, beets, lettuce and radish.

We agreed that by the third day the oxen should be ready for the road again, and Jack was away soon after sunrise of the bright spring morning. He took the trail for the railway station some thirty miles to the south, and the sound of his wagon rumbling over the soft earth came floating back on the breeze as a sort of accompaniment to the heliose voice which Jack affected when he was ox-driving.

My next effort was the digging of a cellar. The location of our shack had to be decided upon, and for this I called Marjorie and Jean into council. We agreed that it should be close to one brow of the ravine, and that Jack should build his close to the other, so that each would command an unbroken view of his neighbor. Perhaps even then we had some premonition of the specter of loneliness creeping down upon us through the night mists of the summer or the snow-wraths of the blizzard, and already we were planning our lines of defense.

"How many rooms will there be?" asked Jean. "Let me see—reception room, living room, parlor, dining room—you must at least have that."

"We shall," I said, "and one door will lead into them all. A room is anything you call it. We can change the name as we change the purpose. One moment it is kitchen, the next, living room, and so on."

"Draw a plan of it," said Marjorie, turning up the planned side of a board. So I sat down and drew a plan, while the girls watched over my shoulders with as much interest as though I were an architect designing a palace.

"The house will be one story," I explained, "and long, and narrow, because that is the simplest as well as the cheapest way to build it, and we are to be our own carpenters. The walls will be of ship-lap, covered with matched siding, with tar paper between. The roof will be of two thicknesses of boards, bent to a gentle oval over a stout ridge-pole, and again with tar paper between. You have no idea how much the West owes to tar paper. Wherever the new settler goes, goes tar paper. I would almost say, 'I continued, warming up to my subject, that if a flag is ever needed for these western prairies it should be a banner of tar paper, nailed between two lath.' "Oh, says, does the tar paper banner still wave?"—you see, it has possibilities."

"But isn't it awfully smelly stuff?"

said Jean, who had a strain of delicacy in her that at times conflicted with her surroundings.

"Ah, that is one of its chief virtues. You may not know yet, but you will learn—at least, so Zake assured me—that population is not nearly so scarce on the prairies as it seems. He says that the inmates of one of these little bachelor shacks in many cases number literally millions. Millions. Well—they don't like tar paper. Blessed be tar paper!"

I scratched the outline of the shack in the sod with my shovel and began digging a cellar in the center of the little plot. For a depth of nearly two feet I dug through a brownish-black loam that turned easily and threw clean from the shovel. Then I struck a sticky, yellow clay, and the going was much slower. But by the time we heard Jack's hoarse voice and his tired oxen clicking their hoofs up the trail on the evening of the second day I had succeeded in making a hole which we agreed to call a cellar.

Next day we set about our building in earnest. There were no union hours with us. We worked from early morning until after sunset, and laid down our tools at last with affectionate reluctance. We were stiff and sore in every joint and muscle; our hands were calloused and our finger nails were battered with misdirected energy, but our hearts were with the gods. I relate only absolute truth in saying that when our shack was finished we moved into it with a sense of accomplishment such as perhaps no king ever knew amid the luxury of his palaces.

As soon as our first building was finished we started a similar one for Jack and Jean. Then we built a little stable down in the gully for the oxen, the cow, the pig, and the hens; we improved the crossing of the stream; we dug a well; we plowed a small area on each farm and planted it to oats, and then we went on plowing for next season's crop; we bought a mowing machine and rake—on credit—and cut an ample supply of wild prairie hay for our winter needs. We had decided that, as fall came on, Jack and I, with the yoke of oxen, should make a pilgrimage into the more settled districts with a view to getting work with some farmer, and so replenishing our resources.

It was a hot day in the middle of July when, up the trail from the south a speck grew out of the distance. Traffic did not often come our way, and Jack and I both stopped work in the field to study its approach and to conjecture as to whom or what it might be. As we watched, the figure took the form of a horse and rider of heroic size charging down upon us literally out of the heavens. As it approached the mirage lost its illusion and horse and rider came back to earth. By this time we were sure that the glint of color which had seemed to dance vaguely about the figure had a basis in fact; there was no longer a doubt that an atom of scarlet was approaching along the trail.

Leaving the oxen to their midday meditations we walked over to my shack, where Jean had already joined Marjorie. It could now be seen that the figure was approaching at a rapid gait, and its outline, no longer blurred by the shimmering of the mirage, stood out sharp and clear against the distance. It was a mounted policeman.

As he drew up beside us I had a sense of being in the presence of physical perfection. His horse, although wet over the flanks, showed little sign of fatigue; the dust of travel clung to the rider's sunburned face, but the smartness of his bearing and uniform was unimpaired. He saluted as he brought his horse to a standstill; then sprang lightly to the ground.

"I see I am right," he said, addressing Marjorie and Jean. "Won't you introduce me?"

Marjorie was the first to act, although I suspected, even then, that he had spoken more particularly to Jean. "My brother, Frank," she said, "and Jean's brother, Jack. This is Mr. Brook."

We shook hands cordially, and Jean asked our visitor if he had had dinner. "I have not," he confessed, "but please don't go to any trouble." But the girls were already in the house, making preparations.

"There's a stream around here, if my mumps are right," the policeman continued, speaking to us, "and both Dick and I could do with water."

We led him down to the stream, and to the well, and although I was disposed to be prejudiced against this strapping young fellow who seemed to take more than a casual interest in Jean, I lost much of that prejudice through a little incident that happened when we reached the water. Although Brook was undoubtedly suffering from thirst he removed his horse's bit, so that he could drink in comfort, before he accepted the proffered cup of water which Jack brought him from the well. Jack and I spoke of it afterward and agreed that a chap who did that sort of thing was a good bit of a man.

After a hearty drink Brook took off his hat and tunic, produced towel, soap, comb and brush, and cleaned up even more thoroughly than seemed necessary. As I watched him parting his hair by the reflection in the water I realized that Brook had not forgotten what so many of us pioneers often did forget—the value of personal appearance. While we walked up the bank together I admitted to myself that although I was as good a man as he was, I didn't look it.

The meal which the girls had prepared loosened all our tongues, and before it was over we were chatting merrily. Brook had the latest gossip from Regina, and interesting news about himself. At last he had escaped from barracks, temporarily, at any rate. He was detailed to two months' relief duty at a point farther west; he promised himself another meal at our board on his way back, a prospect which Jean and Marjorie and Jack received with much satisfaction, and I trust I showed no smallness about it.

At length Brook insisted that he must be on his way, but before going he laid a dollar bill on the table in payment for his meal. We objected most strenuously to accepting money for our hospitality, but as he pointed out that it was the government that footed the bill, we allowed ourselves to be persuaded. Governments, like railways, are legitimate prey. Also, from somewhere, the policeman produced a small box of candy, which he presented impartially to Marjorie and Jean. But most important, in so far as this story is concerned, was a bundle of letters. They were tied together with a stout string, with only the backs of the envelopes exposed, and on them was written in a bold hand the single word "Spook."

"They're for a young Englishman who is to be a neighbor of yours," Brook explained. "He left word at the Regina post office, asking to have his mail sent out if there was any chance. It seems he had some local fame under the name of Spook, and the clerk in the post office reread his letters that way. That's discipline for you! My word, what they wouldn't do to a man in the force—"

"I know him," I broke in; "at least I have heard of him. Zake, our land guide told us about him. Where does he settle?"

"Northwest quarter of Two," said the policeman. "Two miles due south of you, as the crow flies, or would fly if he had occasion to. Spook isn't there yet—I came by the quarter this morning. I suppose he's traveling by ox team and will arrive some time later in the season. You'll see his sign up on Two when he gets here, and perhaps one of you wouldn't mind dropping in on him with this mail, if he doesn't call on you within a few days. He's English, and he may wait for an introduction."

We shook hands with the policeman and parted with him, and the girls stood watching the scarlet figure as it faded to a speck in the distance.

"Isn't he wonderful, Frank?" said Jean, turning to me with an enthusiasm dancing in her eyes which, under any other circumstances, it would have been good to see. "Don't you think that he—that all of the mounted police—are very wonderful?"

"All of the mounted police are wonderful," I agreed, catching at the impersonal noun.

Two mornings later we saw the white gleam of a tent on section Two. We quit work early that afternoon, hitched the oxen to the wagon, and went down en masse to call on Spook. He saw us when we were yet far off, and, when it was evident we were headed for his tent, he came striding out to meet us. He was tall and slim and sunburned; he wore leggings and corduroy trousers and a belt, and he took off his hat when he saw the girls.

"My first callers," he said, in his clear, English voice. "This is Jolly decent of you. Won't you get down, ladies, and visit my farm—this is it, all around here—while we unitch the bullocks and turn them to grass. I suspect you are my neighbors from Fourteen?"

"Fourteen and Twenty-two," said I, acting as spokesman, and introducing our little party. "We have heard of you, but only as Spook."

"Spook is good enough. In fact, I think it is rather a ripping name, don't you? And I know enough already about the West to know that a catchy nickname, once applied, sticks. So Spook I am, to everybody, except the dear folks at home, who, of course, could never understand. When I wrote the governor and said the people here called me Spook he answered, 'Such insolence! I'd have the law on them! Remember you are still an Englishman!' Poor old governor!"

"Here are some letters, Mr. Spook," said Jean, extending the little bundle. "Mr. Brook, the policeman, left them as he rode by a few days ago."

"Good old post office!" Spook exclaimed. "Wonderful how they chase a beggar down, isn't it? They even know me by my Canadian name, Good old P. O."

Spook made us come into his tent. The furnishings were not elaborate, but they had a little air of something that seemed to be missing in ours. There was a tin trunk, which had been sat on until it had a great depression in the top, and a leather trunk, generously plastered with labels. There was a great box, which he used as a table, and dishes of inappropriately delicate china. There was a folding cot with steamer rugs. Quite a handsome shaving set was strapped to a wall of the tent, and a great cartridge belt with a prodigious revolver hung from a tent pole, while a rifle leaned against it. Spook evidently meant to sell his life dearly, if there should be any demand for it. Three or four English magazines lay about, and a tobacco jar with pipes stood in the center of the table. But what caught Jean's eyes were the pictures on the walls. Spook's tent was up less than a day, and there were pictures on the walls.

"This is my diggings," our host was saying. "A little crowded inside, but plenty of room outside. The law of compensation, you know. Have to do for the present. Heavily expensive business farming. We'll have some tea presently, if there's any spirit left in the spirit lamp. Sorry I can't offer you anything better." So he rattled on and made us feel very much at home, even while I found rising in my heart some yearning of sympathy for him.

The sun was setting when our little caravan started homeward, casting its mammoth shadows across the soft, warm prairies, and bearing Spook's promise to return our visit at the earliest opportunity.

CHAPTER VI

Spook was as good as his word. The following Sunday we saw his ox team as a slowly-growing speck on section Eleven, and a mile away we heard remarks to the "bally bullocks" which, presumably, were intended to be confidential.

"I just brought the bullocks for exercise," he explained, when he drew up before our shack. "I could have walked much easier, and much quicker, but they keep my arms and voice in form."

The girls were waiting in the shade at the eastern side of the shack; in their Sunday dresses of flimsy stuff appropriate to the hot weather they looked very sweet and charming.

"Ah, here are the ladies," said Spook, and in his manner there was a touch of gallantry that in some way seemed foreign to either Jack or me. "Real prairie roses, and no mistake," as he took their hands in his. "It's jolly decent to ask a stranger over. All this out-of-doors; dawn, sunsets, sky, distance—all very fine, but it isn't good to be too much alone with it. Rather overwhelming one, don't you think?"

"I have felt that," said Jean, while Marjorie was fumbling for words. "It's too grand; it oppresses one. It's—it's all soul; no body."

"That's it—that's it!" Spook agreed. "All soul—no body. I shall write that to the governor. The governor, dear old chap, thinks this country is rather a bit off the map. I have promised to shoot him a polar bear for Christmas, and he's quite looking forward to it. He writes to know if I find the native labor satisfactory, and can my man mix a decent whisky and soda. I must set his mind at rest. I let him think I run quite an establishment, you understand; he sends a check now and again, which, of course, bears a relationship to the position I am supposed to occupy in local society."

"Doesn't your conscience trouble you?" Marjorie queried, the conversation having swung into her orbit.

"Not at all. I am doing the governor a kindness. He spends rather too much money on whisky and soda—particularly the former—so I am merely getting him interested in another kind of extravagance. A Younger Son is a very successful form of extravagance, don't you think? What is it Kipling says—'By the bitter road the Younger Son must tread,' or something like that? So why shouldn't the governor sweeten the bitter road a little, and drink less whisky to his soda?"

While we were busy thinking of some appropriate remark Spook remembered his bundle of papers.

"I ventured to bring these over," he said, tendering them to Jean. "Just some old copies of the Illustrated London News and the Graphic. There are some sketches by an artist showing his conception of homestead life, I rather suspect the governor has let him read my letters."

Presently the conversation turned to agricultural topics, and we were more at ease.

"My plowing," Spook explained, "has gone better since I discarded my compass. The bullocks never took kindly to the compass. No doubt it was a foolish notion of mine that a furrow should run either east and west or north and south, seeing that the whole farm has to be plowed anyway. I now let them veer and tack as they please, and we are making considerable headway."

"Any crop in?"

"Not this year. A chap in Regina advised me to plant a sack of rolled oats and raise my own porridge, but, thank Heaven, I'm not Scotch. No reflection on the Scotch," he added hurriedly, noting a warning flash in Marjorie's eyes. "They are a very wonderful people. They eat oatmeal, and thrive on it. A very wonderful people. Oh, I say! Can't we have some tea? Beasty dry business, homesteading; no afternoon tea. I must speak to my man about that. He's the same man as mixes my whisky and sodas, according to the governor's idea of it," Spook explained.

The girls went inside, and in a short while brought out tea and sandwiches. "Do you know," said Spook, when the girls had cleared up the tea things and were out of hearing, "the thing of which I stand most in need at the present moment—that thing which is so essentially English, and from which I have been divorced for more days than I care to number—that thing for which I would gladly give half of my kingdom, meaning the northwest quarter of section Two? No? Observe the blushes beneath my sunburned cuticle as I admit that for weeks I have not had a bath. For weeks, literally. If my poor governor could know that, not even the hide of a polar bear would reconcile him to leaving me to live the life of a savage."

"We can soon fix that—I mean, we can furnish the wherewithal," said I, "and I will expect the deed of eighty acres in return." So we led Spook down to the pond.

"My word, my word," said Spook. "Why didn't Zake tell me about this? I will have that land guide's gizzard for this omission! My word, if only I had a bathing suit! I say, do you think there would be any great danger—any danger at all, that is—of an interruption?"

"Not a bit. We showed him all organized," and I waved him a red handkerchief tied to a stick. "When the pond is in use we fly this banner on the bank of the gully, and we're as safe as Sunday. The girls usually have their plunge in the middle of the afternoon, for that matter, and leave us undivided possession in the evening."

Spook was already half undressed. "My word, and do the young ladies swim?"

"Jean is the best swimmer I ever knew," I confessed, modestly. "We lived beside a river at home, and she had a way of bagging all the prizes at our swimming races."

"She bagged bigger game than that," Jack put in. "She stored up a lot of trouble for herself and the rest of us by pulling our worthy Frank out of the millpond one day, after the bubbles had begun to come." So then I had to tell Spook about that incident. But I avoided reference to the pledge that had followed it.

This girl Jean seems to be pretty interesting to any male who comes along. Is Frank jealous of Spook?

Cheap for $1,200

A western young man visiting New York city thought it would be due to buy his sweetheart's engagement ring there. Entering a Fifth avenue store he was waved from one lively clerk to another down a long aisle and at last reached the counter where there was a personage who sold engagement rings. "Here are some rather neat rings," said the distinguished one. "Small, of course, but in good taste." Our young friend liked their looks, but was pained to learn they ran from $3,500 to $5,000 apiece. He admitted, in some confusion, that he wished something a little cheaper. Then the mighty one reached into a bin and brought up a handful of sparklers. "Take your pick," said he, politely repressing a yawn. "$1,200 each." The home-town jeweler sold that ring—Capper's Weekly.

When Brides Were Bought

Wedding gifts apparently have developed from the earlier custom of exchange of gifts between bride and bridegroom, in turn based upon marriage by consideration, where the author had to give to the father of his intended wife a bride price or present and the daughter was provided with a dowry as a return gift.

The price for a bride shows considerable variation, according to the wealth of the interested parties and the accomplishments of the bride. Among certain tribes a couple of pigs or goats seemed to be sufficient capital necessary for investment in one good husky helpmate. Among the Bedouins of Mount Sinai Westerners tell us the price of a girl is "from $5 to $20," but sometimes amounts to $30 "if the girl is well connected and very handsome."

A man with an elastic imagination is apt to mistake it for his conscience.

Guard Proves He's Alive

London is full of tourists from practically all countries and most of the overseas visitors never fail to be interested in the stalwart guardsmen on duty at the Horse Guards headquarters in Whitehall.

Some stare at them deliberately and one French girl refused to believe a motionless figure was alive. She stood alone and gazed harder, then suddenly joined her French friends looking somewhat flushed. She explained that the soldier was real after all—he had deliberately winked at her.

IS IT FAIR TO THE PRINTERS?

The whole principle involved in the subject of government ownership of industry is wrapped up in the government printing and selling stamped envelopes, the only absolutely socialistic movement that the government has gone into.

To the everlasting glory of the American press and particularly the rural press, it has stood solidly as a matter of principle and without price against all encroachments of government which would tend to break down or destroy American ideals of freedom and the right of existing individual initiative and enterprise. It has done this in the face of government competition and government ownership in the printing industry and in spite of the fact that a large percentage of stores, banks, doctors, lawyers, and manufacturing institutions which would fight such competition in their own line of business, consistently fail to patronize the printing offices of the publishers from whom they expect protection when necessary arises.

On orders under 10,000 it is impossible for printers to furnish envelopes with a printed return address at a price to compete with the government. For amounts over 10,000 larger printers can produce printed envelopes far below government figures.

It is the small publisher and printer who is hurt worst by the government competition. This is the general rule in all lines of activity when government ownership is established. The more the government gets into the field of business, the more impossible it will become to eliminate the government printing of envelopes.

This problem affects not only the printers of this nation, but every individual who ever hopes to do anything besides draw pay in an official position.

WILL TAKE COLLEGE TO FARM

Radio broadcasting, by ending the isolation of farm life, will be the greatest factor of modern times in keeping young men on the farms, declared Gen. J. G. Harbord, president of the Radio Corporation of America, in a recent address.

"With 31,000,000 people living on farms, the agricultural colleges enroll but 150,000 students. Radio should bring the advantages of scientific schooling to millions of farmers. It will enable the student whose college course has been interrupted to continue it, often with the same instructors. E. "Of all that may be said of radio, the best is that it will tend to keep young people on the farm. There is the true independence; there is the real throne of the American sovereign. Entertainment and culture and the throbbing life of the metropolis, carried to the farm by radio, helping to make rural life more attractive and desirable, will sustain that class which is the backbone of our national existence."

COPPER CO. PRESIDENT DONATES
$1,000,000 IN NOTES

Phoenix, Oct. 15.—One of the most unusual ceremonies connected with any industrial organization was that held at the annual stockholders' meeting of the Central Copper Company at Dos Cabezas, Arizona, last Monday, when $1,000,000 in notes and interest coupons, given as an outright and unconditional donation to the company treasury by the president of the organization, T. N. McCauley, were burned.

This is probably the first instance in industrial history where a donation of any such magnitude has been made to a company treasury and the company entirely relieved of a million dollars of indebtedness to the president of the company merely by the touching of a lighted match.

The notes and interest coupons represented were some of those personally owned by T. N. McCauley. The ceremony of destroying these company obligations was held in the presence of many of the directors and stockholders of the company.

The Central Copper Company is employing about 200 men at its mines at Dos Cabezas, and have recently announced construction plans involving a considerable expenditure aimed towards production during the coming year.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Federation of Labor Spurns Briton's Plea for Union With Russian Workers.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
GREAT BRITAIN is alarmed by the spread of communism in that country, but Americans need not worry about it over here. If the words of President William Green of the American Federation of Labor and the cheers that greeted them in the federation's annual convention are a true indication.

Arthur A. Purcell, member of the British parliament, president of the International Federation of Trades Unions and a fraternal delegate to the meeting in Atlantic City, told the convention of his recent visit to Russia and his study of industrial conditions there, and then advised the workers of America to establish the closest relations with the Russian workers.

"We must not be afraid of new ideas," he said. "It has often struck me that, while the Americans have been the most advanced, the most receptive, in ideas concerning mechanical inventions and business organization, they have been slow in accepting new social and political ideas. Just as British workers have sent delegations to Russia, so I hope and trust the American Federation of Labor will do the same. Do not be afraid of being called names. Were Abraham Lincoln, Samuel Gompers or 'Gene Debs, those great sons of the American people, ever afraid of being called names or being reviled, maligned or persecuted?"

Whereupon President Green arose with fire in his eyes and said: "We in America know something of the teachings of communism and the control the communist party exercises over the so-called Russian Internationale. We know that influence emanating from Moscow is seeking, as it has always sought, not to co-operate with us but to capture and control us. They call the officers and representatives of the American labor movement fakers, crooks, and scabs. Frankly they say they do not believe in collective bargaining. They do not see in any strike an opportunity to increase wages, to shorten hours, to improve the condition of the employment for workers, but they see in every strike an opportunity for revolution."

"The Trade Union Educational League here in America, which is a creature of the communist party, frankly announces that its policy is to bore within the labor movement, to destroy it and substitute for our philosophy the philosophy of communism. We are not ready to accept that, and we wish that our friend who has so kindly offered such frank suggestions might take back to the Russian Red Internationale this message: That the American labor movement will not affiliate with an organization that preaches that doctrine."

Jumping to their feet, the delegates all shouted their approval of Green's declaration.

In the opening of the convention Mr. Green voiced the determination of organized labor to fight for passage of the child labor amendment to the Constitution. The executive council reported an increase of 13,000 in membership over last year.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE won new laurels for himself by his address before the convention of the American Legion in Omaha. "Tolerance" was his main theme, and he pleaded eloquently with his fellow Americans to drop every vestige of racial, religious and sectional intolerance. "It seems clear," said he, "that the results of the war will be lost and we shall only be entering a period of preparation for another conflict unless we can demobilize the racial antagonisms, fears, hatreds, and suspicions, and create an attitude of toleration in the public mind of the peoples of the earth. If our country is to have any position of leadership, I trust it may be in that direction, and I believe that the place where it should begin is at home."

"If we are to maintain and perfect our own civilization, if we are to be of any benefit to the rest of mankind, we must turn aside from the thoughts of destruction and cultivate the thoughts of construction. We cannot place our main reliance upon material forces. We must reaffirm and reinforce our ancient faith in truth and justice, in charity and tolerance. We must make our supreme commitment to the everlasting spiritual forces of life. We must mobilize the conscience of mankind."

Mr. Coolidge paid warm tribute to the service rendered to the country and to humanity by the members of the Legion, and thus summarized remarkably well America's effort in the World War.

"In the victory which was finally gained by you and your foreign comrades, you represented on the battlefield the united efforts of our whole people. You were there as the result of a great resurgence of the old American spirit, which manifested itself in a thousand ways, by the pouring out of vast sums of money in credits and charities, by the organization and quickening of every hand in our extended industries, by the expansion of agriculture until it met the demands of furnishing continents, by the manufacture of an unending stream of munitions and supplies, by the creation of vast fleets of war and transport ships, and, finally, when the tide of battle was turning against our associates, by bringing into action a great armed force on sea and land of a character that the world had never seen before, which, when it finally took its place in the line, never ceased to advance, carrying the cause of liberty to a triumphant conclusion. You reaffirmed the position of this nation in the estimation of mankind. You saved civilization from a gigantic reverse. Nobody says now that Americans cannot fight."

Earlier in his address he said he was "a thorough believer in a policy of adequate military preparation, and after the cheers subsided he continued:

"No doubt this country could, if it wished to spend more money, make a better military force, but that is only part of the problem that confronts the government. The real question is whether spending more money to make a better military force would really make a better country. I would be the last to disparage the military art. It is an honorable and patriotic calling of the highest rank. But I can see no merit in any unnecessary expenditure of money to hire men to build fleets and carry muskets when international relations and agreements permit the turning of such resources into the making of good roads, the building of better homes, the promotion of education and all the other arts of peace which minister to the advancement of human welfare."

The Presidential party, which included Mrs. Coolidge, returned at once to Washington, with a short stop in St. Louis.

The Legion gathering was considerably stirred up over Colonel Mitchell and his air service charges and theories. Finally a compromise resolution was adopted which, without naming Mitchell, recommended the reorganization of the national defense under one cabinet officer with subdivisions of equal importance for land, sea and air.

Philadelphia was awarded the convention of 1923 and it was decided to hold the meeting of 1927 in Paris, France.

WITH Judge E. Finley Johnson of Michigan, a member of the Philippines Supreme court, presiding, the International Judicial commission to investigate the Shanghai riots opened its inquiry. The body is composed of American, British and French judges, and, according to the Chinese, is dominated by the British with the Americans as their dupes. Therefore the Chinese are violently opposing the investigation, asserting that there is no chance of a fair decision.

ALTHOUGH the allied and German statesmen in conference at Locarno, Switzerland, are working earnestly and apparently amicably to draft a security treaty, they have not, at this writing, solved the main problem, the eastern frontiers of Germany. Briand insisted that France should have the right to guarantee the arbitration treaties between Germany and Poland and Germany and Czechoslovakia, and Chamberlain for Great Britain supported him, but the Germans, Stresemann and Luther, objected, preferring England as the sponsor for the treaties. They also declared firmly that they would not agree to any provision in any of the treaties which would prevent Germany's seeking revision of the eastern frontiers. The security pact for the Franco-German frontier could be fixed up speedily except for one point—the right of France to send troops through German territory to aid her allies of the little entente in case they are attacked.

ITALY'S Fascists are going ahead at a great pace. Last week they brought about an agreement of closest co-operation between the confederation of industry, representing the employers, and the federation of Fascist labor unions, and then the grand council of the Fascist framed constitutional changes giving the government absolute control of every phase of industrial, political and administrative activity. One provision creates a board of compulsory arbitration for industry and labor, and another makes strikes crimes punishable by death. The Fascist also are conducting a violent campaign against Freemasons and there have resulted serious disorders in various cities, especially Florence where several murders were committed.

COL. WILLIAM MITCHELL, on the eve of court-martial for insubordination, was ordered by the adjutant general of the army to appear before the naval court investigating the airship, Shenandoah. He showed up in full uniform and accompanied by his cousin, Congressman Frank Reid of Illinois. The colonel objected to taking the oath but asked leave to read a brief statement. Admiral Jones, president of the court, refused to allow this and Mitchell still declining to testify, the court took the matter under advisement.

The President's air board heard a large number of officers of the various services. The air officers were about equally divided for and against the proposition of a defense department with a separate air force. Rear Admiral Moffet, chief of the bureau of aeronautics, was an especially interesting witness, giving his opinion of the air service as of the greatest value and telling the board at length what he thought should be done to improve it. On Wednesday the board adjourned to attend the three days of air racing at Mitchell field.

DEFYING the known wishes of the President, the federal shipping board, after depriving the Fleet corporation of its powers, removed Leigh C. Palmer from the presidency of the corporation and ordered that Elmer E. Crowley be elected to succeed him. Palmer was offered a vice presidency in charge of European affairs but declined and severed all connection with the corporation. Other changes of personnel were ordered by the board and carried out. Rear Admiral Cone, retired, vice president and general manager of the Fleet corporation, then resigned, telling Chairman O'Connor that "without regard to other considerations, I cannot, as a retired naval officer, serve any organization that defies the wishes and policies of the President of the United States."

FRENCH and Spanish forces in eastern Morocco have effected a junction, the former advancing northward from Kifane and the latter moving south from Alhucemas bay. Thus the Rifis are completely surrounded. But the rainy season on which Abd-el-Krim has been counting has come and the Europeans are finding their operations increasingly difficult. Jules Steeg, minister of justice, has been selected as resident general of French Morocco to succeed Marshal Lyautey, who resigned.

In Syria the rebellious Druses have been thoroughly routed by the French tanks and bombing planes. JUST as the world's championship series between the Washington and Pittsburgh ball teams was opening, all lovers of the national game were saddened by the word that Christy Mathewson, one of the most famous and best loved of all pitchers, was dead at Saranac Lake, N. Y. "Big Six," as he was called, succumbed to tuberculosis which attacked him after he was gassed in the World war.

The State Corporation Commission has ordered that the company continue its present lines at increased fares.

COATS WITH DIGNIFIED APPEAL; SIMPLE COATS FOR CHILDREN

THE two types of coats mainly in demand, as the season advances, are those that are luxurious and rich looking, and those that have a flavor of sports styles in mannish, plain, sturdy garments. The latter depend upon cut and the right choice of pattern, in familiar materials, to give them their character, but dressier types call upon fabrics, furs and embroideries, the new silhouette and endless individual touches and variations, for the distinction to which they may rightfully lay claim.

All these elements that go to make up dressy coats are meant and drink to French designers, who fairly revel in soft, supple fabrics, intricacies of cut, splendor in embroideries and new style ideas. They are sending over rich coats, of dignified appeal, that rival fur coats in opulent but conservative

All in the blue October weather, when crisp, bright days do their part toward making shopping tours a pleasure, little maids may expect to acquire their new winter coats. In the meantime mothers are taking thought as to what is best suited to the needs of her girl and is pleased to find that fashion still dictates simple styles for children—both in practical coats for school or general wear and in coats somewhat more dressy.

For all-round wear, hold plaid fabrics and mixtures are shown, cut either straight or in lines that flare from the shoulder down. There are some blocked materials among the lighter woods, that are attractive and made warm enough by interlining and twill linings. Very small girls are provided with coats of wool bengaline, among other fabrics, with satene linings and styling. One of these, as sketched and shown here, is made of dark green cloth, with embroidered bands in green and gold and decorations of beaver fur.

The oddity of fur emplacements on collars and sleeves and the long revers, is distinctly Parisian. The lower edge of the collar is scalloped, disclosing glimpses of embroidery beneath it, the deep cuffs leave a portion of the sleeves at the wrist uncovered and the revers is graduated in width. Embroidered banding emphasizes the daring neckline. This model would make a good choice when velvet is used.

In a great many fur-trimmed coats the straightline silhouette has been retained, and on some of them fur is so lavishly used that it covers about half of the garment. Worth has sent warm interlining. Tucks are a favored decoration for the smaller coats, while machine stitching is popular on coats for larger girls.

Pile fabrics, including those of the needlepoint variety, suede and smooth-finished cloth, with velveteen make up, a large part of the fabric list for children's coats. Colors, in addition to the usual dark browns and blues, include new shades of blue, the wine shades and rosewood, and velveteen is used for trimming the plain cloths. Fur collars are conspicuous by their presence on all sorts of coats and kimmer in collars and cuffs is the most popular choice on velveteen.

One of the most important style points in children's coats appears in the shoulder cape, which, in some in-out a cloth coat with border of fur that reaches to the knees, cuffs of it that end at the elbow, shirt-bosom front and rolling shawl collar that need not fear comparison with the most sumptuous all-fur model.

Both long and short haired furs are used on coats and those garments made of pile fabrics in brown or other fur colors, with collars and cuffs of fur dyed to match are as beautiful and luxurious as fur coats.

lanes, extends to the hipline. Usually, with these coats, a choker collar of fur carries out the military suggestion in the cape. Cape coats and one-piece frocks with shoulder capes have the support of French designers and are very becoming to children.

Besides the cape coat there are some striking novelties in autumn color styles for young misses. Strong color contrasts in blocked patterns, as red and black, are used for straight box coats, smartly collared and cuffed with long-haired furs. Such coats are fastened with three large buttons at the front. Chinilla cloth, in a variety of colors, lined with bright flannel, makes a cozy and substantial garment usually boasting a raccoon collar. Unique, and very American, are novel coats with scarfs to match, made of Indian blankets. The native colorings and primitive, but effective designing in the figured patterns, make them conspicuous, but good looking.

Wellston, O.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to make me

strong. I was troubled with my back and sides hurting me till I could not do my work, and whenever I caught cold it made me irregular. Since I have taken the Vegetable Compound my side and back don't bother me and I can do my housework and care for my children now, where before I did not feel like doing anything or going around. After my first child was born about four years ago I saw an advertisement in the paper about the Vegetable Compound. I knew it would help me, but I was afraid to try it because people said it would help you to have children and I knew I was having children fast enough. But I thought if it would help me it would be better to have a whole house full of children and have good health. I became stronger from taking it and my husband says I look like a live woman instead of a dead one. When Spring comes I am going to take your Blood Medicine as I am very thin. I will answer letters from any woman who wishes to ask about your medicine."—Mrs. WILLIAM BUTTS, Wellston, Ohio.

The DAIRY

RAPID DECLINE IN MILK PRODUCTION

The rapid decline in milk production as the summer advances is the result of a combination of factors, says C. B. Bender, assistant dairy husbandman at the New Jersey College of Agriculture, New Brunswick. Chief among these is the poor condition of pasture.

In many regions a drought in mid-summer causes tough and woody pasture. The result is that the cow, especially if producing a liberal amount of milk, doesn't get sufficient food and loses flesh by trying to keep up production. Finally the production declines, slowly at first and then more rapidly as conditions become extreme. Records from creameries show that for 100 pounds of milk delivered June 1 there are only 46 pounds delivered August 1.

Fles may be a slight factor, but their importance is overestimated. The flies and the hot weather are factors in so far as they both discourage the animals from grazing.

If kept on pasture the cows should be turned out to graze during the early morning and late evening. The growing of soiling crops may be a good practice. Grain is an effective means of holding up production, but it is an expensive practice to the extent that the grain replaces grass. Silage is not a complete ration, but it may be used alone to supplement pastures. If conditions are such that most of the feed has to be supplied outside of pastures, then the feeding should be practically the same as in winter.

If the production of the herd drops to a marked degree during the summer it cannot be brought back to the point where it should be. Therefore, to insure a paying fall production, it is highly important to keep up the milk flow during the summer, even though there may be no immediate profit.

Records of Cow-Testing Association Are Exact

Yearly milk and butterfat production as determined in cow-testing associations by weighing and testing one day's production each month is accurate within a very small per cent, says the United States Department of Agriculture. To determine the accuracy of the cow-testing association method of calculating yearly production, the department made a study of the actual yearly production records of 70 cows of the Minnesota experiment station. These Minnesota records gave the production of milk and butterfat for each milking throughout the year.

By systematically picking out the weights and tests for one day each month as they would have been obtained by cow-testing association methods and then calculating the yearly production it was found that the association method was accurate within 2 per cent on milk production and within 3 per cent on production of butterfat.

A tabulation was also made of 100 yearly individual cow records from the department farm at Beltsville, Md. These records gave only the milk production night and morning for each day in the year. A yearly total, calculated from one day's record each month, when compared with the actual milk production showed an accuracy within 1.99 per cent. These comparisons indicate that the method used in cow-testing association work gives a very accurate record of production.

Alfalfa and Clover Are Good for Dairy Heifers

That alfalfa or clover hay fed with corn to dairy heifers produces good growth and favors early maturity, was shown by recent feeding tests at the Ohio experiment station. In the tests, continued through two winters, alfalfa hay and corn were fed to one lot of Holstein and Jersey heifers and clover hay and corn to a similar lot.

Without other feed both lots made more than average normal growth. Alfalfa hay did not prove greatly superior to clover hay for growth when fed liberally with corn, but it did prove superior to clover hay for fattening, or gain in weight. The tests showed that either alfalfa or clover fed with corn furnishes sufficient protein and other essential materials to produce excellent growth.

The liberal use of legume bays favors early maturity of heifers. This permits early breeding with a consequent saving in time and cost. The legumes carry more calcium, or lime, than the grasses, and good alfalfa, clover, or other legume hay, is therefore better than timothy or other grass hay for growth.

Dairy Hints

Keep the drinking water supply for the dairy herd clean and wholesome.

Ship your cream at least three times a week during hot weather. Keep it cool.

Buy that new herd sire while the demand is slack and you can get better bulls for your money.

HOW TO SOLVE A CROSS-WORD PUZZLE

When the correct letters are placed in the white spaces this puzzle will spell words both vertically and horizontally. The first letter in each word is indicated by a number, which refers to the definition listed below the puzzle. Thus No. 1 under the column headed "Horizontal" defines a word which will fill the white spaces up to the first black square to the right, and a number under "Vertical" defines a word which will fill the white squares to the next black one below. No letters go in the black spaces. All words used are dictionary words, except proper names. Abbreviations, slang, initials, technical terms and obsolete forms are indicated in the definitions.

POULTRY FACTS

FALL REMINDERS OF FARM FLOCKS

The past few months have been our dull months with chickens. About all we could do was to raise a flock of good pullets for winter egg production. Any man who has tried raising poultry knows that the last few months have called for extra effort on our part. But the time will soon be here when we are going to reap what we have been sowing, writes J. W. Recknor, Jr., in the Farm and Ranch. The pullets will shell out the eggs and the price will soar higher as cold weather comes on. Our dull months, you see, have been our hard-working months. But to reap what is due us we must not lay down on the job now as cool weather approaches. The thing to do is to get everything in the best shape possible to clean up some cash this winter. The merchant puts his store in the best shape possible, cleans up and improves as much as he can, so as to be prepared for the fall business. Here is where his profits pile up. During the dull season he gets by, perhaps, but he counts on the business this fall for extra profits.

Clean up the old store. That is, roll out the nonproducers from the flock. Get rid of the drones. Keep nothing on the yards except money-makers. Turn all the shoddy goods to the market man, and hit the fall and winter months with a flock of healthy, vigorous bread-winners that bring in the dough. If you have a large flock and you are afraid to do the culling, then get the assistance of some one who has had some experience. It pays to cull. You get the same number of eggs on less feed and house room. The nonlayers eat up your profits and crowd the producers. Get rid of them.

If you are not feeding the birds as you should, get them on a good ration at once, as the pullets must be in condition to lay. If you have bred-to-day chickens and you have done your part in keeping the pullets growing all summer and you continue to give them the right kind of attention, you need not fear but what you will be rewarded this fall and winter with a heavy egg production. Feeding right has much to do with a laying hen. She can't lay unless her food contains all the elements that go to make up an egg, and in the right proportions at that. An egg ration will have to be fed through the winter. It might pay to look into your feeding methods. Sometimes, by doing this, a mistake can be detected before it is too late.

Handling of Pullets in Autumn Requires Skill

No one thing requires more skill than the correct handling of a flock of pullets so that a maximum yield of eggs may be obtained all winter. First of all, the birds must be fat, as this gives them the necessary strength and endurance. To have them fat, large quantities of hard grain must be fed. Three-fourths of the food they consume should be hard grain. It is not as important during the latter part of their development that they have as much mash as when ready to lay. If milk is fed, very little mash is necessary. They should have plenty of green food at all times.

When the first eggs are found on the range, at least one-third or one-half of the birds best developed should be placed in their winter quarters. If the birds are allowed to remain very long on the range after starting to lay, the change to winter houses is sure to check them and may cause a fall molt. When the remaining birds show maturity, they should be put in winter quarters also.

Caution in Culling Is Urged by a Poultryman

Practically every rule has its exception. "Early molting birds are poor layers," say experienced poultrymen. This is true in the main, but there are exceptions.

N. E. Chapman, poultryman with the agricultural extension service, University of Minnesota, points out that many farm flocks went into a premature molt early in June because of lack of feed, hot poultry houses at night, and depredations of mites. Egg production by these flocks fell off rapidly, but as sufficient feed is supplied and poultry houses properly ventilated and the mites exterminated, the flocks are gradually increasing production.

"When culling such flocks, each hen should be carefully studied for evidence that the molt is about to subside," says Mr. Chapman. "The best hens will come back and they ought to have their chance. The poorest ones will, of course, continue to molt and should be discarded."

Balanced Dry Mash

The use of a balanced dry mash containing 2 per cent ground limestone in addition to the hopper of oyster shells will usually prevent the production of soft-shelled eggs. A failure of the egg-making organs to function properly might cause soft-shelled eggs. Such hens have to be located by the trap nest or by observation in small flocks. Then they can be marketed and replaced with vigorous pullets which will probably be free from such trouble.

WALTER P. CHRYSLER'S TRAFFIC TALKS

Is there any reason why sidewalks should be of uniform width throughout the city? In the past sidewalks have been of the same size largely for the sake of appearance. But wouldn't it be sensible to learn to what extent sidewalks are used and then build them accordingly. In many cities sidewalks could be made narrower and streets wider and motorist and pedestrian alike would be benefited.

There is an eleven-story building in Washington which devotes almost the entire basement for motor storage for its office tenants. The capacity, I am told, is 100 cars. The basement is reached by a two-way ramp. There is an idea that is very good.

Indianapolis has demonstrated the value of the arcade garage and has shown that it is possible to make a garage of many floors pay even at a low day-storage rate. Most cities have learned that down town garages should not occupy expensive street frontage.

The problem of day-storage of motor cars in our cities is becoming more and more serious. Tenants of office buildings must have room of some kind to park their cars. The Hotel La Salle, Chicago, has worked out a plan which merits attention. This hotel built in the shape of a "U" has utilized the court for a three-story garage. Instead of an elevator, one spiral ramp handles cars both ways. The Edgewater Beach Hotel in Chicago uses an underground parking system. This is for the use of guests.

CIRCUS CLOWNS FOR STATE'S FREE FARE

Phoenix, Oct. 15.—Three noted comedians and clowns who have appeared with all the leading circuses in the world, from the Sanger Show in England to Barnum & Bailey and the Ringling circuses in this country, will appear at the Arizona Free State Fair to be held in Phoenix from November 9 to 14, inclusive.

Camille, himself, and his two brothers, Antoine and Pierre, were featured for many years with the Barnum & Bailey circus with screamingly funny horizontal bar acts. This act has been in existence 30 years, and in that time but one change has been made in its personnel. It is one of the funniest acts of its kind in the world.

The Camille Trio is but one of the many entertainment features to be on the daily and evening programs arranged by the Arizona State Fair Commission for this year's great event. With both day and night shows featured the greatest entertainment program ever arranged for a southwestern state fair is to be provided. Other acrobatic acts include Cliff Curran, who performs at the top of a 70-foot swinging pole; the Flying Floyds, one of the world's greatest acrobatic acts, and the Three Melvins, famous circus hand leapers.

In addition, Stanley's Equine Racers will show twice daily on the race track, while the finest feature of all—Thearle-Duffield's fireworks display will be presented every night of the fair excepting Saturday.

"Next winter to be worst in 216 years," says savant. More Florida real estate booms.

One objection to the expression "used car" is that the adjective is so darned inadequate.
