POULTRY FACTS

FATTENED POULTRY BEST FOR MARKET

It is well known that during the fall months there is relatively little fresh killed young poultry on the market, because the season for broilers has passed and the great bulk of the roasters has not yet reached the market. Therefore, prices for well-fattened young stock are excellent.

Farmers and commercial poultry men should never think of disposing of their market poultry in an unfattened condition, says the Department of Agriculture. This is true whether the birds are sold live or dressed, and is apparent since much better prices are paid for well-fattened stock than where the stock is taken directly off the range. Farmers throughout the country lose many thousands of dollars through not properly fattening their stock. The birds to be fattened should either be placed in boxes, stalls, open pens or in fattening crates where they are kept for a period of two or three weeks. The size of the birds is an important factor, because a bird that weighs from three to four pounds usually fattens more readily than the smaller bird. The larger the bird when the fattening period starts, the shorter the time required for fattening. A three-pound bird can be fattened quite well in three weeks, whereas a bird weighing four pounds when put in the fattening crate, could probably be fattened in about two weeks.

Birds are best fattened on moistened ground grains. Several good fattening rations have been used, one of which is as follows: Equal parts, by weight, of cornmeal, ground buckwheat and middlings. Another good fattening ration is composed of two parts cornmeal, one part crushed oats and one part middlings. A variety of grains is a good thing, although cornmeal is particularly valuable for fattening purposes. Whatever fattening mixture is used, it certainly should be moistened with sour skim milk, using enough milk to make the mash into a thin batter which will run out of the pull when the birds are being fed. Milk not only improves the palatability of the mash, which induces greater consumption, but it also improves the quality of the flesh. It should be used whenever possible, for it not only has good fattening properties but also tends to keep the birds in good health.

When the birds are properly fattened they should each gain about one pound in weight; therefore, there is not only a larger bird for market but the price per pound will be considerably higher than where the birds are not fattened. There is no excuse, therefore, for not fattening cockerels and culled pullets, and this year it should be done early because of the increase in grain prices.

Soy Bean Oilmeal Is an Excellent Poultry Feed

Tests at the Indiana experiment station covering four years and involving 900 single-comb White Leghorns and Barred Rocks proved soybean oil meal equal to tankage or meat scraps for laying hens. Mineral matter must be added to the soybean oil meal, however, to make up that deficiency.

The Purdue standard basal ration was used in the tests. It consists of grain, 100 pounds of corn, 100 pounds of wheat, 50 pounds of oats and mash, 50 pounds of bran and 50 pounds of middlings. To this was added 30 pounds of tankage or 35 pounds of meat scraps or 45 pounds of soybean oil meal plus 10 per cent of minerals or 47.5 pounds of whole soy beans plus 10 per cent of minerals.

The mineral mixture consisted of 22 pounds of steamed bonemeal, 24 pounds of finely ground limestone and 15 pounds of salt. The addition of mineral matter is necessary to prevent a great growth of fat.

The United States Department of Agriculture considers soybean oil meal an excellent feed for growth and egg production.

Crowding During Winter Is Harmful to Poultry

Quite a number of farm poultry raisers make the error of housing too many hens and pullets together during cold weather. Hens will lay as well if yarded and well cared for as if in free range. But they dare not be crowded when they are confined.

If the hens are being fed and forced for egg yield alone, we must get them into winter quarters in their pens early in the fall and keep them there without changing them about. Introducing new hens into the flock of laying birds always causes more or less confusion, and this helps in decreasing the number of eggs laid.

Best Turkey Fattener

Old corn fed partly whole and partly cooked, with hulled potatoes, and thickened into a mash with meat, is one of the best fatteners for turkeys. Give the mash in the morning and the whole corn at night. Do not confine them. If new corn is given, the tendency is to have bowel trouble. For this give hulled milk. They must be free from lice to fatten. Turkeys will be so high this year that each carcass should be made to bear as much flesh as possible.

If George Washington—

Finding of Bones of Lord Fairfax Suggests Interesting "If" of American History

By JOHN DICKINSON SHERMAN

LORD FAIRFAX'S bones, which had been "lost" for many a year, were discovered the other day by workmen excavating under the old Episcopal church in Winchester, Va. This is the Lord Fairfax whose name is remembered in American history, chiefly because he started out by getting him a commission as a public surveyor and employing him to survey his Virginia estate. All of which suggests one of the many interesting "ifs" of American history:

If George Washington had not had this experience as a surveyor of the wilderness, would he have been the first President of the United States of America?

The Fairfaxes are an old English family. Our Lord Fairfax was Thomas, sixth Baron Fairfax, who inherited his Virginia estate through his mother, the only daughter of Lord Culpeper, who got it through royal grant. Born in England in 1691, he was educated at Oxford, held a commission in the Horse Guards, contributed papers to the Spectator and achieved an enviable reputation as a man of fashion.

Lord Fairfax, having been flitted by a court beauty—so the story goes—withdrawn from fashionable life and about 1739 paid a visit to his Virginia estate. He liked it so well after a year's stay that he went back to England, gave away his other properties, closed up his affairs and in 1745 arrived in Virginia to stay. After a time he established Greenway Court, a manor of 10,000 acres near Winchester, where he lived until his death in 1782. The title has been continuously recognized by the British House of Lords, but the first of the American Fairfaxes formally to lay claim to the peerage was Albert Kirby Fairfax, a banker of New York and London. He was recognized in 1908 by the House of Lords as the twelfth Lord Fairfax of Cameron.

Lord Fairfax was the owner of about 5,282,000 acres, extending from the sea over into the Shenandoah valley, between the Potomac and the Rappahannock. This is 21 of the counties of present-day Virginia. During the Revolution Lord Fairfax, a universal favorite, was not disturbed by either side. After the Revolution the quitrents and similar charges were abolished and the estate became in all respects subject to the jurisdiction of Virginia. Mount Vernon was originally a part of the Culpeper grant.

Indians and Science

Although the American Indians knew nothing of chemistry and geology as sciences, they were quick to take advantage of chemical combinations and geological conditions. James Brangan of Philadelphia, speaking at the meeting of chemists in Los Angeles, pointed out the ingenious method by which Indians made arrowheads, spears and knives. They used a piece of bone scoured or soaked in ashes.

Here's how the old English lord came to be the "guide, philosopher and friend" of the youthful colonel: The Fairfaxes and Washingtons came together early. Lord Fairfax, upon coming into his inheritance, put his cousin William in charge of the Virginia estate. William established a residence at Belvoir, about 1743 Lawrence Washington, half-brother of George, inherited Mount Vernon and married Anne, daughter of William Fairfax. When Lord Fairfax came to Virginia to stay he lived for a time at Belvoir before establishing Greenway Court, where he kept open house.

George William Fairfax, oldest brother of Mrs. Lawrence Washington, and George Washington were warm friends. When the brother married Miss Carey of Hampton, Lord Fairfax invited George to accompany the bridal party on a visit to Greenway Court. It was the hunting season and Lord Fairfax soon had George in the saddle. He found the sixteen-year-old Virginian as expert and fearless as himself.

Then and there began the friendship between Lord Fairfax and George Washington which was to continue through the vicissitudes of the Revolution and end only with the old baron's death. It was a friendship that undoubtedly had much to do with the molding of the young Virginian's character in the formative stage of youth. For Lord Fairfax was a polished man of the world. Long and intimate association with him was practically a liberal education to young George. Lord Fairfax was an ardent Royalist and many a battle of argument he and his young guest had at Greenway Court. As his protégé increased in stature and in public favor, Lord Fairfax foresaw with sore dismay that he was the chosen instrument to win the independence of the colonies and humble Great Britain's pride. Yet their friendship never slackened. But when at last came the news of Yorktown the old baron cried, "Take me to my bed; it is now time for me to die." And die he did within two months, in his ninety-first year.

Now let us look at George Washington's surveying experiences in the Virginia wilderness in the light of the first stepping-stone in his journey to the Presidency.

He set out from Mount Vernon March 11, 1748, on his first surveying trip into the Fairfax principality. He had just completed his sixteenth year. His journal gives details. We find he and his men lost their tent in a high wind; swam their horses over swollen streams; slept in the open by campfire; roasted their meat on forked sticks and used chips for plates; rode over "the worst Road that ever was trod by Man or Beast." Once the straw on which they were lying caught fire—"We were luckily preserved by one of our men waking."

In 1749, at seventeen, Washington was made official surveyor of Calpeper county. He continued surveying for two years. His success as a surveyor led to his appointment in 1751 as assistant of one of the four military districts of Virginia. This in turn led to the appointment as commissioner to the French on the Ohio, which was the real beginning of his military career.

Washington's life as a surveyor gave him a splendid physique. When he had his growth he was "straight as an Indian, measuring six feet two inches in his stockings and weighing 175 pounds." This stood him well during the Revolution. Long hours in the saddle could not tire him. He slept once under a tree with its roots for a pillow. The privations of Valley Forge could not daunt him. He rode a horse to death to get to the front at Monmouth and stop the retreat and had breath left to curse Lee for his cowardice "till the leaves curled on the trees."

Washington's life as a surveyor gave him wide acquaintance with the people of the frontier settlements and understanding of their character and ways—and it was of such frontiersmen that his armies were largely made.

Washington's life as a surveyor made him 100 per cent efficient in the ways of the wilderness, where efficiency means life or death. He learned to a hair's breadth what a man could do with rifle, horse and boat. He learned the craft of the Indian, the finest natural fighting man the world ever saw. It was in the wilderness that he learned how to save his men when Braddock met disaster; how to cross the Delaware in the ice and surprise the Hessians at Trenton; how to fool the enemy by leaving his campfire burning; how to wait and wait and wait till the right moment; how to run like a coward and come back like a brave man; how to use Morgan's riflemen who came in response to his hurry-up call; how to estimate distances and numbers; how to get the lay of the land and pick his battle-field.

So—if George Washington had not been Lord Fairfax's surveyor, would he have been commander in chief of the Continental army? And would he have won the Revolution—which made him President?

Or was George Washington raised up by Divine Providence to be the "Father of His Country?"

CHILD LABOR ON FARMS

The National Industrial Conference Board finds that about 87 per cent of children under 14 years old that work in gainful pursuits do so on farms. Their work may frequently be of vital importance to the great number of small farmers in this country. Many things go to cause this situation. Economic necessity drives many families to require the youngsters to work on the farm. Lack of easy access to the school discourages others, although this cause is not so common as it used to be. Lack of interest in school work plays an important part, but probably no more than in the city. What does prove a big cause, however, is the fact that the city child really has to have more of the higher education in order to obtain work than does the country boy or girl. And this ought not to be.

NEIGHBORS

By ROBERT STEAD

AT LAST

SYNOPSIS.—Lured by his four-year-old playmate, Jean Lane, Frank Hall, six, ventures on the forbidden wall of a dam, in a small Ontario town. He falls into the water and is saved from possible death by clinging to Jean's outstretched arm. A little later Jean informs him that because of their adventure of the day before he is in duty bound to marry her. He agrees when they are "grownups." With Jean's brother, John, also aged six, Frank begins school. Two years later they are joined by Jean and Frank's sister, Marjorie. A little later Jean confides to Frank, in verse, her hopes of some day becoming "Mrs. Hall." He accepts the "proposal." Frank is fourteen when his mother dies. The boys are sixteen when John's father is killed in an accident. Two years later Frank's father and John's mother are married. Dissatisfied with conditions, and ambitious, the two boys make plans to go to Manitoba and "homestead," the girls agreeing to go with them. They set out. At Regina they meet "Jack," who agrees to find them satisfactory homesteads. He does so, and the two friends file claims on Sections Fourteen and Twenty-two. Jack sagely advises the adventures in the purchase of supplies, and in a wagon drawn by a yoke of oxen, and with a cow, the four arrive at their future home. Construction of "shacks," and the making of a garden are their first occupations. A young Englishman of the name of "Spoon," a neighbor, they call on Spoon, who is living in a tent. Spoon, on his return visit, discloses himself as a man of varied social attainments. Frank's jealousy is aroused. Marjorie discovers that they have a new neighbor. "He" turns out to be a Mrs. Alton, a widowed Englishwoman, who, with her three-year-old son Gerald, has taken up a claim. Frank and John leave the homesteads for a time to do harvest work for wages on a longer-established farm. They encounter Jack, who tells them of his adventure into matrimony. After two months' absence they return to their homes. Jean's enthusiastic welcome encourages Frank. The land sections begin to fill up with settlers of all nationalities. Jack and his wife have located in the neighborhood Mrs. Alton remains strangely aloof. Winter sets in.

CHAPTER X

Days were by; sometimes days of unbroken sunshine; sometimes days of gently sifted whiteness fluttering off a gray sky. In a week all the prairie was blanketed deep with snow. Then came the great night. At this time of the year, in this latitude, it is dark by five in the afternoon, particularly if the sky happens to be overcast. On the day in question Jack and I had done up our few chores about the stable, carried in a supply of water and firewood, and returned to our shacks for supper. Marjorie, brisk, efficient housewife that she was, had the table set when I came in. Our meals were perforce simple, and when we had finished and the few dishes were cleared away I looked at my watch. It was barely six o'clock.

"This is going to be another of our long, long evenings," Marjorie remarked, with what seemed like a suggestion of complaining. "Suppose you ask Jack and Jean to come over; I don't feel like going out in the snow."

"Jean may not feel like going out, either," I retorted. "I guess she's as much like sugar as you are," I added, having in my mind some reference to an adage about sugar melting.

"I fancy you think she's a good deal more like sugar than I am, brother o' mine," Marjorie returned. "Well, run along and find out."

Later, when I recalled that remark, I was struck by its significance, and at the moment I had no suspicion that Jack and Marjorie were working a scheme on me. I have always held that Jean was innocent of any part in it.

So urged, I pulled on my pea-jacket and overshoes and fur cap and started out on the hundred-yard jaunt from our shack to the one across the gully.

I made the trip without difficulty and entered without knocking as was our custom in our numerous visits back and forth. Jean looked up from the table where she sat reading.

"Alone, Frank?" she said, when I had closed the door behind me.

"Yes; where's Jack?" I came to see.

"Jack left for Fourteen some time ago. He was going to ask you and Marjorie to come over. You must have passed him."

"That's rather funny. That's what I came for. If you reverse it. Strange I didn't see him on the way."

"He may have looked in at the stable again, to make sure that the stock are all right," Jean suggested. "He said it looked like rough weather."

I stood for a moment, undecided whether I should go back for Jack and Marjorie, or ask Jean to go with me. It was she who settled the question.

"Take off your things, Frank," she invited. "Jack will be there by this time, and will keep Marjorie company. It is not a good night for a girl to go walking."

So I stayed, although a little self-consciously. Jean and I had known each other's company since childhood, but, at least since coming to the West, we had hardly seen each other alone. Always Jack or Marjorie, or both, were somewhere about. There had been, of course, that sudden, impetuous, unspoken revelation when we returned from our harvest absence in the settlements, but there had been no talk of love between Jean and me. I had treasured that moment as a bit of wonderful memory, as a glimpse of wonderful promise, but I had not presumed upon it; I had concluded that two months' loneliness had been too much for Jean's reserve, and that she had done something it hardly would be fair to talk about.

Doubtless Jack, when he found I had missed him, would be back shortly.

I took my wraps off and sat down beside the stove. The warmth was very pleasant after the buffeting of the snow, and Jean looked very lovely and tempting in the soft glow of the lamp on the table. I felt a strange embarrassment growing upon me as the moments were ticked off by the little alarm clock on the shelf. The embarrassment grew until I felt that I must break it by speech of some kind.

"What are you reading?" I ventured at last.

"Nothing."

"Nothing? You have a book—"

"I know, but I'm not reading it."

"Then what are you doing?"

"Just waiting."

"Waiting? For what?"

Then she looked up at me, and there was a light in her eyes that was strange and good to see, but it sent my brain reeling. For a moment she looked at me thus, and started my heart thump-thumping like a steam pump. Then her eyes dropped.

"Don't you know, Frank?" she murmured.

Her face was ruddy in the glow of the lamp, and the pink skin shone a color that was not all reflected. Amazing as was her revelation I could no longer fail to understand it. I rose and walked to the table; I took her hands in mine and lifted her to her feet.

"You are waiting for me to—kiss you, Jean," I whispered.

She was trembling, but she spoke with outward composure. "There is something else, first."

"Something else—first? I don't understand."

"You should."

I could not follow her thought. "I kissed you once before," I ventured.

"Many times before."

"No, only once. The other times were when we were children. They don't count."

"Do things that happened when we were children not count—with you?"

"Do they—with you?"

"Ask me, and see."

It had come; the moment of which I had told myself in dreams and visions; the moment to which I had looked forward with a strange fear and a great hope. "Jean," I whispered. "I love you. Will you be my wife?"

As I wrote the words they seem very bare and matter-of-fact. But they were all that Jean required. She made no spoken answer, but she turned her face to mine, and I drew her up in my strong arms and kissed her in the breathless passion of our young love.

After a time, with one box serving us both, we talked of our future. I hinted that circumstances made our immediate marriage somewhat dependent upon the course that Jack and Marjorie might elect to follow. I took it for granted that Jack and Marjorie would marry, but I was very vague in my idea as to when this would happen.

"I don't think we shall have to wait on Jack and Marjorie," Jean remarked, knowingly. "I rather think they have been waiting on us."

"Then they need wait no longer," I said, boldly. "I am ready at once; now."

"We might make it by Christmas," Jean remarked, more thoughtfully. "We can't afford any special wedding clothes but we can at least afford a few weeks' anticipation."

"Then Christmas be it!" I exclaimed. "Oh, Merry Christmas!"

I was so stirred with a strange new joy that all the future looked rosy and inviting. But suddenly I felt Jean's arm tighten on my neck and I looked up in her face just in time to catch the splash of a warm tear on my cheek. I was immediately filled with wonder and misgiving. What could auburn Jean cry in a moment of such happiness? I pressed the question.

"I'm not sorry," she said at length. "but I'm a little—frightened. Not for you; for myself. Oh, my dear Frank, my dear boy—will you always—will we always—love each other as we do tonight?"

Manlike, I assured her that of course we would. She rested her head against mine, and for awhile she seemed to nestle at peace in the soft luxury of our love. But presently a shiver ran through her frame, and drawing back a little, she looked me fairly in the eyes.

"You know, Frank," she murmured. "it seems strange to say it, but I am so glad to get this settled."

"Not gladder than I, little one," said I, snipping my lips to endearments with the awkwardness of my racial reticence. "You couldn't be gladder than I am."

"I have waited so long," she continued, almost disregarding my interruption, "to get it settled—to be sure of myself—to know just what is going to happen."

"You should be gladder," I said. "No—why should I? Jack is all right. And I have you. But I thought he would have been back before this."

"Listen!"

We strained our ears, and presently became aware that what had seemed to be the silence of the night was really full of noises. The wind whined with an eerie note about the eaves of the little shack, and the

"To be sure of yourself? How sure of yourself?"

She dropped into a moment's silence, as though studying her words before attempting an answer. "You won't misunderstand, I think, Frank," she said at length, "if I tell you that I have been somewhat like a traveler on the prairie who comes upon two roads, and is not quite sure which he should take. Let us say a storm is sweeping down from the north, and his very life depends on the right decision. But the longer he stands there, looking at them, the harder it is to make the choice. It's a comfort to choose, and to be on one's way."

"But suppose he chooses the wrong way?" I blundered out, only half following her meaning.

"Oh, Frank!" she cried, seizing my shoulders in her strong, supple hands. "It mustn't, mustn't, mustn't be the wrong way! I won't have it the wrong way—I won't think of that as possible! See, here we are. And we have known, always, since we were little children, that we were for each other. Haven't we, Frank? It has always been settled, in heaven, don't you think, and we have just confirmed it? Oh, I know it has—I know it has!"

"I have never doubted it," I said. And even as I uttered the words the first little poisoned arrow of doubt in some way dodged through my armor and stung me in the heart. Perhaps it was the reaction to Jean's vehemence; perhaps it was that I saw her striving over-hard to convince her self. And from being over-sure I now craved to be assured.

"You are quite sure?" I ventured, after another silence in which I felt that subtle poison slowly chilling through my veins. "You are quite sure you should not have taken the road to section Two?"

"Oh, Frank!" For a moment she buried her face in my shoulder, then she lifted her head proudly, like one who goes forth resolutely to try his spirit in some great issue. "Yes, I'm sure! Spoon is to me only a neighbor, an acquaintance, always. I am quite sure."

"You're on Twenty-Two, All Right, but Why Did You Come Back?"

"And there was no third trail, no little-beaten third path that might have been the one to be chosen?" I persisted, anxious to still my demon of doubt at its birth.

"You are thinking of Brook," she caught me up instantly. "Let that give you no uneasiness. Brook was only an incident—a rather pleasant incident," she added, and for the first time I realized how exquisitely tantalizing Jean could be, "but an incident, after all. Let's not talk about it, or think about it, any more, at all. Everything is settled."

So, by force of will, we turned our minds into happy, unquestioning channels, and talked of the future, our future—and built fairy dream castles that were most wonderful things to dream about. From time to time Jean arose from my knee to throw fresh wood on the fire but she needed no coaxing to return. Some strange phenomenon had already occurred between us, and Jean, with all her gentleness and beauty and delicacy, no longer walled herself about with quite the same barrier of shyness as had been her custom. But her soul, I knew, was as pure as the snow sitting across the white prairies outside.

At last we had to come back to earth. "It's growing colder," said Jean, as she again replenished the fire. Then, glancing at the little clock on the shelf, "Why, it's after midnight! Jack is late."

"Are you uneasy for him?"

"No—why should I? Jack is all right. And I have you. But I thought he would have been back before this."

"Listen!"

We strained our ears, and presently became aware that what had seemed to be the silence of the night was really full of noises. The wind whined with an eerie note about the eaves of the little shack, and the tremor of its pressure ran through the board walls and wrong mournful creakings from the slender framework of the building. Above all came a sound of rushing, as though the night itself swept by, drumming on the tin chimney-pieces as it went. The incessant lash of snow against the black panes of the windows gave further notice of the rising storm.

"Perhaps I had better go home," I said at length. "Jack is doubtless waiting there until I turn up."

"You have the same privilege to wait here until he turns up," Jean commented. "Still, I suppose it's the right thing to do."

So, reluctantly enough, I got into my pea-jacket, cap, and overshoes, and with Jean's goodnight kiss on my lips, and a promise to come again very soon, I opened the door. The moment I did so the section of the storm put out the light, and the next instant a hail of icy snow particles lashed through the room. I pressed the door shut again while Jean found matches.

"Such a night!" she exclaimed. "Is it quite safe to try it?"

"Of course! It's not a hundred yards, and I could make it with my eyes shut."

So, with another farewell (for good measure) I started again, Jean slapping the door and closed it behind me. My first sensation was of having been clutched by the neck; of being strangled in a grip which I could not throw off. In a few moments the worst of that sensation passed, and my lungs began pumping violently, working against the partial vacuum created by the storm. It was not very cold, but the snow stung the face where it struck; it clung in the eyebrows, melted, and ran into the eyes, blurring such poor vision as there was in the gaunt grayness that buffeted from every side.

I looked for the light of the shack on Fourteen, but it was nowhere to be seen; evidently its faint rays could not beat their way through the hundred yards of swirling tempest that intervened. So, taking careful note of my directions, I started out, my head bowed to save my face from the lashing of the storm; my legs wallowing uncertainly through the varying depths of drifts.

At length I knew I had come to the edge of the gully; although I could see nothing I was aware that I was going sharply down a steep slope. Here at points the snow was already piled in great drifts and I plunged through it waist deep, only to come suddenly upon a bare, icy spot where I lost my balance and fell. I was now at the bottom of the gully, and the ascent proved even more difficult than coming down. I had to plow through deep drifts and scramble up icy ledges, and I could only suppose that I had reached the top by the greater violence of the storm. Nothing was to be seen but a gray mist; my eyes were almost completely closed with snow and ice. I was not cold; indeed, I was warm, but I began to realize that my exertions and the strangling sensation I felt in breathing were quickly exhausting me. However, there could not be much further to go, and I pressed on.

It is wonderful how little sense of distance the average man has when deprived of the service of his eyes. He may walk a road every day in the year and yet have but a faint idea of the number of paces it represents. He probably could not tell you how many steps there are in the stairs of his house. As to direction he is even more hopelessly at sea, and when, in addition to these difficulties, he is plunging waist deep through snow drifts and buffeted by a fifty-mile gale he is in imminent danger of becoming hopelessly lost. Just how near to that state I had come I began to realize, and it was with more relief than I would have cared to admit that I at length discerned a faint glow of yellow light battling against the storm and throwing fantastic specters into the night. I was soon at the shack, and, groping my way along the wall, I reached the door and burst in.

Jean was sitting by the stove, her wonderful hair down about her back and neck, her face resting in her hands, her feet on the rail of the stove and her dainty ankles peeping out from under her woolen skirt. But for the moment my appreciation of her charms was buried in amazement.

"Jean! what are you doing here?"

"Frank! You've come back! What is the matter?"

I threw off my mits and rubbed the snow from my eyes while Jean took my cap and shook it and then stood by, eagerness and apprehension in her face. Then, when I was quite sure I was not in a dream or a mirage, "I guess I'm back on Twenty-two, am I?" I said, as one who, suddenly awakened from sleep, finds it impossible to recall his surroundings.

"You're on Twenty-two all right, but why did you come back? Not that I'm not glad to see you—you know I am. Frank, dear, always—but, why did you come back?"

"I guess it's because my time hasn't come," I answered, soberly. "I've heard of getting turned around in a storm, but I didn't know it could happen so easily. I suppose it was when I fell at the bottom of the gully."

"Well, you're here, and we're not going to take any more chances," said Jean, slipping her arms about my neck when I had told her. "We're going to have a little supper, and if Jack doesn't come you will stay until he does."

"Great Christian Creed"

The Athanasian creed was one of the three great creeds of Christendom—the two others being the Apostles' creed and the Nicene creed. It derives its name from Athanasius, the opponent of Arius and champion of orthodoxy, by whom it was supposed to have been written. It is the most rigid of three creeds mentioned, and was the standard of orthodoxy during the Middle Ages. It is famous for its so-called "damnable clauses." By many it is thought to have been written by Sergeant Hilary of Arles about 450; some argue for a later date, between 700 and 800, while others pronounce it a forgery.—Exchange.

Guinea Pigs for Table

Guinea pigs used as food are tamed whole, or may be cut into pieces and fried or friedless. Cavies are excellent as entrees. In various steaks and served with mushrooms, with brown onions, peas or a la sauce, and especially with curry. On account of the whiteness of its skin the smooth-haired white guinea pig is best adapted for the table. The males become somewhat strong flavored with age, but are fine when four or five months old. Females are tender and finely flavored for a much longer period of time. They are probably at their best when about one year old.

Bathtubs in Motors

Motor vehicles fitted for long cross-country tours are furnished with an added convenience in a bathtub built into the floor and concealed by a trap lid when not in use. The basin is fastened securely so that it cannot rattle when the car is moving and is emptied by removing a plug at the bottom.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Jean hustled about and my eyes followed every graceful movement as she prepared hot tea and made toast at the fire, and found a jar of preserves that she had cached away for some special occasion. And when we had finished our breakfast she gave me a lamp and sent me into Jack's room. And after a little her timid voice called to me a last goodnight, and through the open doorway of my partition—we could not afford unnecessary doors in those days—I saw her slender hand tossing me a caress. And then her light went out, and I lay under Jack's warm blankets listening to the roar of the storm and hoping Jack was quite all right, and marveling at the amount of happiness one human heart can hold. My doubts were gone; my faith was again the faith of a little child. And my mind wandered back into the past and poked up again those tender days of childhood when Jean and I played together beside the dam, and the solar millwheel across the stream flung its myriads of diamonds in the air. And Jean had saved me in those days, and I was to be hers—hers and she mine, forever!

I awakened with a consciousness that the shack was very, very cold. Under the blankets I was warm enough, but the breath with which I filled my lungs was the breath of the Arctic. The cabin was in inky darkness. Outside, the whine of the gale had risen to a roar, and the frail timbers of the little shack creaked and trembled under its fury. I thought of Jack, and wondered. The telephone—lost of all God's gifts through the inventive mind of man to those who live in the isolation of vast distances—was as yet not in general use on the prairies. As I look tonight at the telephone on my desk by means of which I can speak instantly to Jack's house or any other house in the neighborhood I am reminded that these miracles of today are accepted so much as a matter of course that we are in danger of forgetting what the world was before they came. But that night there was no telephone on my wall, or Jack's; no fire-shed messengers from house to house could hear through the storm the cheerful news that all was well.

So I thought of Jack and wondered. Jean had accepted his absence with composure; she afterwards said that Brook, the mounted policeman, had told her that the man who was prairie-wise, when caught away from home by a storm, stayed where he was safe, even if his doing so occasioned some uneasiness to his friends.

"It is better that your friends should be uneasy while the storm is on than that they should follow you with flowers when the weather clears," Brook had declared, and Jean, after accepting the philosophy, had passed it on to Jack. She had no doubt that he was as safe as on Fourteen as was I on Twenty-two.

But I had none of this philosophy to steady me, and I was decidedly uneasy about Jack. My brief wrestle with the storm had shown me how easy it was to become hopelessly lost even among the most familiar surroundings and how soon exhaustion would overpower one. A little irresistible shiver of nervousness ran up my spine as I realized how fortunate I had been in coming back to my starting point. I might have missed it and gone on into the night.

Jean seems to be sure, at last. But is she? Girls have been known to change their minds.

Guinea Pigs for Table

Guinea pigs used as food are tamed whole, or may be cut into pieces and fried or friedless. Cavies are excellent as entrees. In various steaks and served with mushrooms, with brown onions, peas or a la sauce, and especially with curry. On account of the whiteness of its skin the smooth-haired white guinea pig is best adapted for the table. The males become somewhat strong flavored with age, but are fine when four or five months old. Females are tender and finely flavored for a much longer period of time. They are probably at their best when about one year old.

Bathtubs in Motors

Motor vehicles fitted for long cross-country tours are furnished with an added convenience in a bathtub built into the floor and concealed by a trap lid when not in use. The basin is fastened securely so that it cannot rattle when the car is moving and is emptied by removing a plug at the bottom.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Great Christian Creed

The Athanasian creed was one of the three great creeds of Christendom—the two others being the Apostles' creed and the Nicene creed. It derives its name from Athanasius, the opponent of Arius and champion of orthodoxy, by whom it was supposed to have been written. It is the most rigid of three creeds mentioned, and was the standard of orthodoxy during the Middle Ages. It is famous for its so-called "damnable clauses." By many it is thought to have been written by Sergeant Hilary of Arles about 450; some argue for a later date, between 700 and 800, while others pronounce it a forgery.—Exchange.

LUXURIOUS COATS OF CLOTH; NEAT TAILORED DAYTIME FROCK

DRAWING conclusions from the early coat arrivals women of fashion are destined to be wrapped in the folds of luxury during the forthcoming months. There is a sumptuousness about present-day cloth-with-fur coats which lies beyond the power of pen or tongue to tell. Only "seeing is believing," for even a most vivid gift of imagination might fall short of visualizing the elegancies of fur and fabric and color glory which combine to produce the modern topcoat.

It is a foregone conclusion that the fur-trimmed cloth coat will prove a formidable rival to the all-fur coat. To the utmost of their creative genius fashionists are playing up the fascination of resplendent fur trimmings on cloth superb in quality and richly colorful—wherefore, all things taken into consideration, there is logic in the green cloakings combined with conspicuously handsome fur. Among favorite coat shades, certain tones of purple, various reds and copper brown are outstanding, the same lavishly enhanced with decorative fur.

For sports coats spectacular plaids lead, the fur trimmings blended to the grays, browns and tawny tins included in the weave of the cloth.

As to the tailored frock for autumn daytime wear, the ultra-fashionable trend is decidedly clothward. Chic is the word, when it comes to the styling of these cloth modes. Even the most conservative tailored frocks reflect the spirit of the flare by subtly introducing flattering trickeries of plait and godet.

The handsome street gown here pictured interprets hemline fullness through expert manipulation of invertaggression, "If in doubt" choose a fur-bordered cloth coat. Let the two handsome models in the picture serve as "a second to the motion."

The coat to the left is styled of quality-kind bolivia cloth. Its color scheme is adorable, being cranberry red with rich brown fur. There is a cleverly placed side flare.

The long roll shawl-collar and deep cuffs on the coat to the right emphasize the attractiveness of fur embellishment. Handsome stone marten is its kind, though chinchilla or squirrel would prove equally as interesting. The circular flare at the bottom ed plaits. This cloth dress is the type that appeals to the "gentlewoman" with whom the fine art of correct dress is a gift innate. Perfection of detail is expressed throughout this mode of superior creation, climaxing in the dainty white pique piping which accents the neckline of the strictly man-tailored revers.

From the color standpoint woolen materials are of compelling interest, this season. Wine color, and various rich red hues, also green, dark, especially, give something new to think about. The material used for the above described and herewith pictured gracefully interprets the new silhouette.

Gray cloth coats with gray fur trimmings register as a foremost fashion. Other intriguing color schemes include ox-blood red for the cloth, trimmed with black fox in generously wide hem-border, matched to deep cuffs with huge collar; lavish red fox on black cloth or velours; pencil-blue woolen fabric edged with squirrel and there is a decided trend toward dark

MY FAVORITE STORIES

By IRVIN S. COBB

(Copyright, 1925.)

Lo the Wise Indian!

Big Chief Meyers, who caught for the New York Giants in the days when the battery of Mathewson and Meyers was famous, was—and still is—a remarkable man. Although a full-blooded Indian of one of the California mission tribes he is a college graduate and, what is rather unusual in a professional ball-player, an exceedingly well-informed lover of art and he has a keen wit. His tribal name was Tortes. One day a curious person asked him why he had taken the name of John Meyers.

"It sounds so Indian," said Meyers. On another occasion a friend invited Meyers to tell him what his favorite pictures were.

"There are two that I particularly like," said the brawny Indian. "One is Abbey's mural painting, 'The Quest of the Holy Grail,' on the walls of the Boston public library. Whenever I'm in Boston I go to see it. And the other is that picture called 'Custer's Last Stand.'"

"Surely you don't mean that atrocious chromo showing a lot of white cavalrymen being killed and scalped—that thing which some harvesting company out West used to give away as an advertisement?"

"That's the identical one," said Meyers. "But why, in the name of goodness should you favor that dandy?"

"I'll tell you why," said Meyers. "It's the only picture done by a white man that I ever saw where my crowd is getting as good as an even break."

Where Proper Relief Lay

Late in life, Messrs. Abrams and Shapinsky took up golf. Both were retired cloak and suit merchants of the type made famous in Montague Glass' immortal stories.

On a glorious September afternoon they were going over the links of their country club. They were playing for a stake of a dollar a hole, and the competition was spirited.

Mr. Abrams drove into a bunker. With his iron he made four ineffectual swipes, raising the sand in clouds. Then he stooped down, picked up the half buried ball and tossed it out on the fairway.

Mr. Shapinsky stiffened with indignation.

"Look a' here!" he whooped. "You couldn't do that. It's against the rules."

"I already have done it," said Mr. Abrams, calmly.

"But again I tell you it's against the rules," declared Mr. Shapinsky. "I have been playing this game longer as you have and I tell you it says in the book where you should not touch the ball with your hands at all. What am I going to do if by such tricks as that you should win the match?"

"Sue me," said Mr. Abrams.

Mostly on the Ground Floor

On his last annual visit to his old home in Alabama, Col. Bozeman Bulger met a husky young negro, whom he remembered as a ragged rickety-alnny. Having spent more than a year with the A. E. F. overseas, Bulger had a natural interest in military matters. He asked the darky what service he had seen.

"I didn't git into de army at all," said the negro.

"That's surprising," said Bulger. "You're one of the huskiest looking specimens I've seen in a long while. Even if you didn't volunteer I should have thought that the draft would have caught you."

"De draft did ketch me, but dey didn't keep me. De gentleman what zaimined me he let me go ag'in."

"What reason did he give?"

"Well, suh, after he done look me ovah he sort of laff an' say he reckoned 'twouldn't be no satisfaction to de Germans to shoot me; an' he tole me to grab my hat an' git on out of dere."

"What were his exct words?"

"Well, suh, near ez I kin rekollect he say dat my feet was so big an' so flat dat even if I did git shot I wouldn't fall ovah."

The Blame Goes With the Name

George Barr McCutcheon, the author, walked into a Boston bookstore—Boston, the home of culture, mind you—and, idling about, found a copy of his own book Graustark. Slipping a fountain pen from his pocket he surreptitiously scribbled his name on the fly-leaf. McCutcheon writes an almost fleecy hand.

He added about a bit, then picked up the book and, carrying it in his hand, approached the proprietor.

"What kind of a yarn is this?" he asked.

"Pretty fair."

"How much is it?"

"Dollar and a half."

McCutcheon opened the volume at the page bearing his scrawled signature. "How about this?" he asked. "What do you want for it with this in it?"

"Oh," said the bookdealer, "that's a mutilated copy. Take it for seventy-five cents."

Solution of Last Week's Puzzle.

HOW TO SOLVE A CROSS-WORD PUZZLE

When the correct letters are placed in the white spaces this puzzle will spell words both vertically and horizontally. The first letter in each word is indicated by a number, which refers to the definition listed below the puzzle. Thus No. 1 under the column headed "horizontal" defines a word which will fill the white spaces up to the first black square to the right, and a number under "vertical" defines a word which will fill the white squares to the next black one below. No letters go in the black spaces. All words used are dictionary words, except proper names. Abbreviations, slang, initials, technical terms and obsolete forms are indicated in the definitions.

SICK WOMEN ATTENTION!

Read this Remarkable Testimony Regarding Results from Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Norfolk, Virginia.—"If you only knew how many women and girls have taken your medicine by hearing my testimony, it would seem wonderful to you. Every day and every chance I have I advise some one to try it. It was in June, 1904, when I had given up to never get well, that I wrote to you. My husband went to the drug-store and brought the Vegetable Compound home to me. In a few days I began to improve and I have often taken it since. I am now passing through the Change of Life and still stick by it and am enjoying wonderful health. When I first started with your medicine I was a mere shadow. My health seemed to be gone. The last doctor I had said he would give me no more local treatments unless I went to the Hospital and was operated on. That was when I gave the doctors up. Now I am a healthy robust woman. I wish I could tell the world what a wonderful medicine Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is. I will be only too glad to answer letters from anywhere. I wish all sick women would take it."—Mrs. J. A. JONES, 317 Colley Avenue, Norfolk, Virginia.

Frederic Massus, the Spanish portrait painter, said in Los Angeles:

"People told me your young movie stars weren't cultured."

Mr. Massus chuckled and went on in his excellent English:

"I dined at the Montmartre with a beautiful movie star the other night, and we plunged into literature straight off. She began to crack up Arlen, but I interrupted her.

"I suppose you're pretty well acquainted with Shakespeare?" I said.

"She laughed and flicked a bread pellet at me.

"No, you don't," she said. "You can't string me! Shakespeare's dead."

Lame, Tired, Achy?

Are you tired, lame, aching—worried with backache? Do you suffer sharp pains, headaches, dizziness and disturbing bladder irregularities? Perhaps your kidneys need attention. When the kidneys fail to properly filter the blood, body impurities accumulate and cause poisoning of the whole system. Such a condition may lead to serious sickness. Don't neglect it! If you suspect your kidneys, why not give Doan's Pills a trial? Doan's have been used successfully over thirty-five years—recommended the world over. Ask your neighbor!

A Colorado Case

J. W. Vaughn, Baldwin Ave., Canon City, Colo., says: "I had an ache across the small of my back and into my hips, which, I believe, came from hard, strainful work. The disordered condition of my kidneys was evidenced by the fact that I needed and after using them, I was relieved."
