ELLIOTT NOT LAW SUIT SPONSOR

Blasbee.—State Senator H. A. Elliott of Greenlee county says he had no connection with the test suit against the new workmen's compensation law, to be heard next Monday in the Maricopa county superior court, and that the action was in no way "friendly," as unintentionally announced recently from the governor's office.

INTERNATIONAL DEBT PAYMENTS

Important effects on general trade movements may be expected to follow the funding and repayment of international debts, states the current issue of the Guaranty Survey, published by the Guaranty Trust Company of New York. The evidences of increasing pressure on our export trade balance in the last two years will probably become stronger as time goes on. The reduction or possible disappearance of the export balance would not, in itself, constitute an adverse influence, since the curtailment in purchasing power abroad resulting from large payments to this country would be balanced by increased purchasing power here.

Such a process, however, would entail a shifting of markets and trade routes, the Survey states, and to some extent a change in the direction of productive effort. Such readjustments could hardly be effected without disturbing to some extent the course of trade.

Foreign Competition

There are several aspects of the situation which cause some apprehension to American business men, the Survey continues. The payment of foreign debts must inevitably be largely made by the export of goods from the debtor countries, either to the creditor country direct or to some third country, which in turn exports to the creditor country. This injects into the domestic markets of the creditor country the element of foreign competition in many products and complaint from those industries forced to meet this competition is inevitable.

So far as high tariffs afford a measure of protection by the exclusion of goods is debt payment necessarily limited. Moreover, the extensive loaning of American funds to other nations for the purpose of economic adjustment and the stimulation of production again inevitably means increased competition for American goods in both domestic and foreign markets.

The contention is made by some of our industrial interests that on the very basis of the credit we have extended abroad foreign industries, through their system of longer and easier credits than we are willing to extend at home, are enabled to invade our markets. That there must be hardships upon individual industries in the process of debt payment and readjustment is clear. Some economists even maintain that the United States will suffer more through the payment of the debts than through their cancellation.

In any event, it is certain that the arbitrary dislocation effected by the war cannot be readily remedied and the process of recovery will be long and in some respects painful. For the benefit of the particular industries which may be affected adversely, the consolation can be given, at least, that in the general restoration of the world to a sound economic status all nations will benefit, our own most of all, and we must learn the lesson that in a world of economic interdependence it is not enough for us to live and let live; we must live and help live of we ourselves are to enjoy the fullness of economic life.

THE SPREAD OF EDUCATION

The urge for education in this country has grown to such proportions that educational institutions are being taxed to their utmost to house the millions clamoring for admission. This year New York City has enrolled, for the first time in its history, more than a million children in its public school classes. Chicago has to its credit more than half a million. So it goes throughout the country. This is the contribution which our public schools are making to the nation. It is the country's investment in its future.

This spread of learning calls for an equalization in our social status, and education must establish it. Existing social classifications can hardly survive the present leveling influence of literacy. In this country, where a laborer today becomes a bank president tomorrow; where a shop mechanic lifts himself to motor magnate; where the self-made rise suddenly from obscurity to eminence, there is needed a new social recognition for all honorable occupations. Educational tendencies must not be controlled by but must control that social standing.

"The Colonel's Lady and Judy O'Grady" may be "sisters under the skin," but education brings the equality to a visible surface.

RALPH CAMERON'S LAND CLAIM OPPOSED BY GOVERNMENT

Phoenix.—After many continuances dating back to February, 1924, the government has submitted to Registrar L. L. Ferrall of the Phoenix land office for decision the question as to the validity of a large number of alleged mining claims held by United States Senator Ralph L. Cameron and associates in the Grand Canyon of the Colorado.

The United States has been contesting the legality of the claims, contending that there is no mineral there. Also involved in the dispute is a statement made by Senator Cameron in the senate in October, 1920, in which he told of now having the backing to erect two large hydro-electric dams in the Grand Canyon. The government Tuesday morning asked that judgment be entered for it by default, but the matter was taken under advisement by Registrar Ferrall. Counsel for Cameron insisted that another continuance had been granted by the secretary of the interior, but official confirmation of this could not be obtained by government counsel.

GET WINTER STYLES FROM JULIA BOTTOMLEY

Fashions for the winter of 1925-26 are more interesting and attractive than ever, according to information from the style centers. And if you would learn more about them in detail, read Julia Bottomley's Fashion Department in every issue of The Patagonian.

Those who have followed this department in the past have come to recognize in Mrs. Bottomley a style authority and writer on modes whose advice can be depended upon. Not only is she competent from her constant contacts with these style centers, but she also possesses that knack of choosing in advance just those things which she intuitively knows will become popular.

Turn to her department in today's Patagonian and see the interesting things she has to offer. And remember, all the materials she describes can be purchased from merchants advertising in these columns.

PIMA GIRL TO REPRESENT STATE IN NATIONAL CONTEST

Miss Caroline Eyring of Pima, Ariz., has been selected to represent the state in the contest for the Moosa Leadership trophy for 1925, at the National Boys' and Girls' Club congress which will be held in Chicago during the International Livestock Exposition, November 23 to December 5. Each state is allowed to enter one boy and one girl in this contest, and the trophy is awarded at the club congress to the club member the judges decide has made the most outstanding record during the year as a leader in organized club work. Miss Eyring has been in club work for seven years, completing eight club projects, and each year as a leader has brought her club enrollment through without a member dropping out. She is 17 years old and was captain of the state chaperonship canning demonstration team in 1922 which demonstrated at the Arizona state fair.

Some people have an idea they can't stand up on their right side without stepping on other people's toes.

THANKSGIVING DAY PROCLAMATION

The following Thanksgiving Day proclamation has been issued by the governor:

Whereas, In accordance with America's oldest custom, Thanksgiving Day is set apart to offer our sincere thanks and gratitude to Almighty God for His tender care and continued blessings; and

Whereas, Our nation has been favored with the good things of life, and we have less suffering and want as compared with other nations; and

Whereas, We have cause for thanksgiving in that our harvests have been abundant and our business has revived; and

Whereas, Peace prevails within our borders, and no industrial disturbances have arisen to interfere with the orderly development of our resources; and

Whereas, Arizona has abundant cause for thanksgiving in that we have been spared calamity, and the long and trying period of drought which proved a serious factor in the existence of our livestock industry has very happily ended, and a return to prosperity is under way; and

Whereas, A lithe and kindred blessings, whether material, social or spiritual, have been vouchsafed to us by the gracious favor of Almighty God, who watches over individuals as well as nations, it is fitting that we, as a people, publicly and unitedly, should express to Him our reverent thanks, and invoke His continued aid and guidance in all our public and private affairs.

Now, therefore, To this end, and in accordance with our statutes, I, George W. P. Hunt, governor of Arizona, do join with the president of the United States in designating Thursday, November 26, 1925, as Thanksgiving Day; and I recommend that all our people refrain from unnecessary labor, and in the home circle and places set apart for public worship, meet and give thanks to Him who watches over us with loving kindness and tender mercy. And let us not forget those who are in need, ministering aid insofar as we are able.

HISTORY SKETCHES

Eighteenth Century Customs

Social life in America in the years immediately before the Revolution and the adoption of the Declaration of Independence occupied much of the time of the inhabitants. Afternoon tea parties were much in vogue, and the popularity of those who attended these was gauged by their ability to make puns during the course of conversation. The punster of the eighteenth century was the equivalent of the "wise cracker" of today.

In the latter half of the century the socially prominent residents began to give greater attention to their personal appearance than before. The use of tooth brushes became rather widespread, and the almost equally popular custom among the women of today, the arching of eyebrows, was given its first trial.

"Mrs. Holliday, wife of Joseph Holliday, tailor, in Arch street," reads an advertisement in a newspaper of this time, "offers her new-invented curious compound, which will, in half a minute, take out by the roots the hair that grows too low on the forehead, i.e., or around the mouth it forms the eyebrows that are too large into a curious arch. This compound is perfectly innocent and may be used on children under 20 months old."

In reading the old advertisement one cannot help but wonder what advantage it would have been to a child 20 months old to have its brows permanently arched into a "curious" look, or if it was a common thing at that time for a child of such tender age to "sport" superfluous hair about the mouth.

In 1769 there came to Philadelphia, according to another old advertisement, a Dr. LeMayeur, a dentist, who proposed to transplant teeth.

"Several respectable ladies had them implanted," writes Watson in his "Annals of Philadelphia." "I remember some curious anecdotes of some cases. They were often two months before they could eat with them."

"Aren't you ready yet, dear?" called her husband from downstairs.

"As soon as I fix my hair, Henry," came the reply.

"Haven't you fixed your hair yet?" For gracious sakes?" came from Henry an hour later.

"Fixed it?" shouted the female voice. "I haven't found it yet!" Exchange.

The BULL'S EYE

Editor and General Manager
WILL ROGERS

I see where some of the Foreign Nations say they are going to FUND their debt to America, and all the Papers are all excited about it. But the BULL'S EYE is a Paper that never misleads our readers (either one of them). FUNDING a debt means about the same thing as having a fellow that has owed you for years, come to you and say "I am going to make arrangements to take up that loan I owe you just as soon as I can collect it from some fellows who owe me." So don't by any means get FUNDING mixed up with PAYING. The two have nothing in common. These Nations are just stalling until another War comes along and the first thing you know our debt will be four Wars behind. We have enough saved up to fight again, but they are using it now to enforce Prohibition.

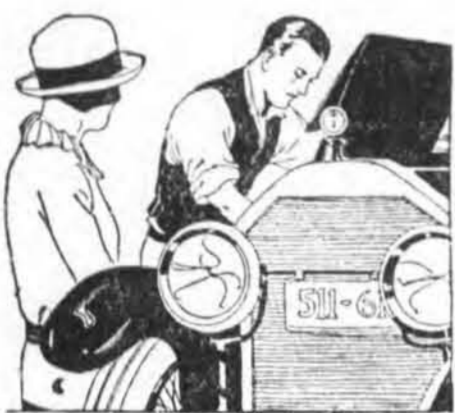

Oh, yes, "BULL" DURHAM. I like to forget to mention that. Well, that is what the Foreign Nations are paying us in. "BULL" DURHAM without the DURHAM.

MY FAVORITE STORIES

By IRVIN S. COBB

Too Much Knowledge for One Mind

Tom Wyatt was a Mississippi planter, one of the most generous and hospitable of a breed of men renowned for their hospitality and their generosity. His bachelor home, "Belmont," in Holmes county, was a haven of refuge for any down-and-outer. A stranger might come when he pleased and stay as long as he pleased.

One summer a certain brilliant and wellborn but dissipated young lawyer was Wyatt's guest. In periods of repentance and temporary abstinence this gentleman spent his spare hours poring over the Scriptures.

Wyatt, who was an outdoor man and no great shakes of a reader, said to him:

"Jim, you must have read mighty near half way through the Good Book by this time, haven't you?"

"Why Tom," said the visitor, "I've read it all the way through, not once but several times."

"You mean from cover to cover, without skipping a word?"

"Yes sir, from cover to cover," Wyatt slowly absorbed this remarkable statement. After a long pause he made answer:

"Jim," he said, "I'm reminded of a remark I once heard made by an old fellow down in the Delta. He said that when any man told him he knew all the multiplication table he must be a d—n liar!"

Scarcely a Lucrative Calling

A group of wealthy southerners, Virginians and Kentuckians mostly, were on a train returning from a meeting of the National Fox-Hunting association. Naturally the talk dealt largely with the sport of which they were devotees. A lank Vermont, who apparently had never done much traveling away from his native state, was an interested auditor of the conversation.

Presently, when the company in the smoking-compartment had thinned out, he turned to one of the party who had stayed on. He wanted to know how many horses the southerner kept for fox-hunting purposes and how large a pack of hounds he maintained and about how many foxes on an average he killed in the course of a season.

The southerner told him. In silence for a minute or two the Vermont mulled the disclosures over in his mind.

Then he said: "Well, with fodder fetchin' such high prices and with dog-meat for hounds a-covin' what it must cost you, and with fox pelts as cheap as they are in the open market, and takin' one thing with another, I don't see how you kin expect to clear much money out of the fox-huntin' business in the course of a year."

A Peacemaker Who Blessed Himself

The peacemaker is blessed. Sometimes he is careful as well. As witness this instance which was told to me by an eyewitness. At least he said he was an eyewitness.

The proprietor of a drug store in a small Indiana town was issuing from the front door of his place when a small boy came tearing round the corner at top gait with his head down and bumped squarely into him.

"Hey, kid!" demanded the druggist. "What's the matter?"

"I'm tryin' to keep two boys from fightin' into a fight," panted the youngster.

"Who are the boys?" asked the druggist.

"I'm one of 'em."

The Full of the Honeymoon

In Chicago a vaudeville comedian married a lady who was likewise connected with the profession. Immediately after the ceremony he left his bride in her room and went to the nearest blind tiger where, meeting a number of very congenial friends, he proceeded to celebrate the recent event fittingly. Several happy hours passed.

Toward dusk the bridegroom went to the telephone and called up his hotel and asked to be connected with his room. His new wife answered. In a slightly husky voice he said:

"Is that you, friend wife? Well, this is friend husband. I just made a date for dinner. How're things breakin' for you?"

God Save the King's English!

According to a reliable Canadian authority a London firm received from a merchant in Porto Rico a letter which, properly framed, now hangs on the walls of the home office—proof in denial of the ancient fable that the English don't know a joke when they see it.

The letter read as follows:

"Why, for God's sake, you send me pump without handle? My customer holler like h—l for water."

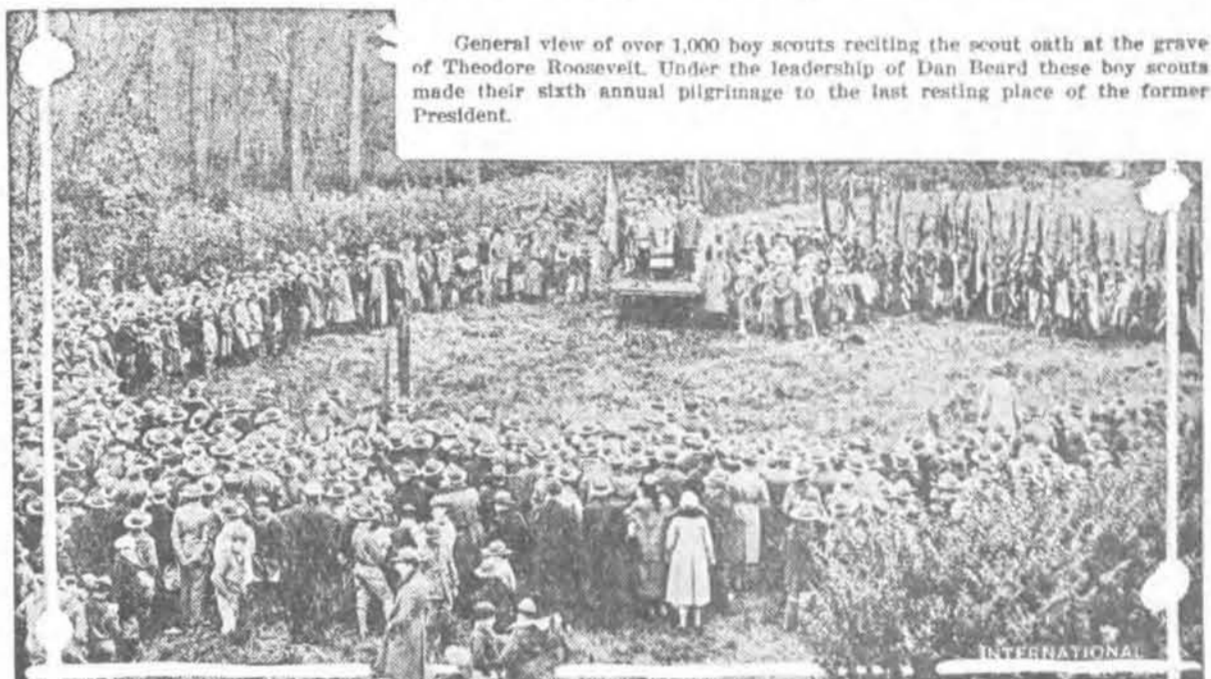

"P. S.—Since writing I find the h—l handle in the box."

WINTER LIFE

SYNOPSIS—Lured by his four-year-old playmate, Jean Lane, Frank Hall, aged six, ventures on the forbidden wall of a dam, in a small Ontario town. He falls into the water and is saved from possible death by clinging to Jean's outstretched arms. Next day Jean informs him that because of their adventure of the day before he is in duty bound to marry her. He agrees when they are "grownups." With Jean's brother, John, also aged six, Frank begins school. Two years later they are joined by Jean and Frank's sister, Marjorie. A little later Jean confides to Frank, in verse, her hopes of some day becoming "Mrs. Hall." He accepts the "proposal." Frank is fourteen when his mother dies. The boys are eighteen when Jean's father is killed in an accident. Two years later, Frank's mother and John's mother are married. Dissatisfied with conditions, and ambitious, the two boys make plans to go to Manitoba and "homestead," the girls agreeing to go with them. They set out. At Regina they meet "Jake," who agrees to find them satisfactory homesteads. He does so, and the two friends file claims on Sections Fourteen and Twenty-two. Jake sagely advises the adventurers in the purchase of supplies, and in a wagon drawn by a yoke of oxen, and with a cow, the four arrive at their future homes. Construction of "shacks" and the making of a garden are their first occupations. A young Englishman of the name of "Spook" is a neighbor. They call on Spook, who is living in a tent. Spook, on his return visit, discloses himself as a man of varied social attainments. Frank's jealousy is aroused. Marjorie discovers that they have a new neighbor. "He" turns out to be a Mr. Alton, a widowed Englishman, who, with her three-year-old son Gerald, has taken up a claim. Frank and John leave the homesteads for a time to do harvest work for wages on a long-established farm. They encounter Jake, who tells them of his adventure into matrimony. After two months' absence they return to their homes. Jean's enthusiastic welcome encourages Frank. The land sections begin to fill up with settlers of all nationalities. Jake and his wife have located in the neighborhood. Mrs. Alton remains strangely aloof. Winter sets in. Frank and Jean enter into a marriage engagement. It is well understood that John and Marjorie are soon to be married. Frank almost loses his life in a snowstorm.

As the frost settled down about me I at length, by a great effort, sprang out of bed and went groping for my clothes. I was not yet pioneer enough to know that it is fine business in very cold weather to sleep with your clothing, or at least your underwear and socks, under your pillow; it lessens the ordeal of that first break from the warm blankets into the wintry atmosphere. At length I found my clothes and scrambled into them, chattering and blowing prodigiously in the operation. No man—still less woman—knows what haste he can develop in his dressing operations until he has had a below-zero temperature as a pacemaker.

Finding matches I lighted my lamp and hurried forth into the main room. The boards beneath me creaked dismally as my weight came upon them; a drift of snow several feet in length and the slings of a great fish had formed across the room as a result of a crack in the door; the stove was ice cold; the water pails were frozen over; the little cubs on the shelf had stopped. My watch was of better mettle and revealed the fact that it was seven-thirty. We had slept well.

I made shavings from a poplar stick in the wood box and soon had a fine fire roaring. When once it was started the great draft of the storm drew it impetuously up the sheet-iron pipes, and I was obliged to apply the damper. No more unhappy irony can befall the homesteader than to burn down his shack in his attempts to warm it.

"Good morning, Frank!" said a voice which set the pumps of my heart going to jig music. I think Jean's voice was really her most wonderful quality; she was enough of the artist to appreciate and cultivate the fine manners of the voice. It had the lilt of singing birds, the limpidity of purling water, the softness of roseleaves in the twilight, the tinkling of silver bells at dawn, and if I can think of any other figure it had that, too, for me in those old love-battered days of mine.

"Good morning, Frank. No word of Jack?"

"No word, Jean."

"He is all right. He is over at Fourteen, and not up yet, I'll wager. Now suppose you go into the men's apartments and face the wall—that fire looks most inviting!"

I did as I was bidden, in part at least, while Jean dressed by the fire. After a little she gave me the "All clear!" and I swept out and seized her in my arms. . . . It was a very wonderful way to begin the day.

"There now," she expostulated at length, "let me get the porridge on. That's more to the purpose."

"Porridge is poor business when there's loving to be done," I argued.

"You won't always think so," she replied as though with some strange glimpse of prophecy, and set busily about preparing breakfast. In these operations she discovered that everything that could freeze had frozen; we melted the butter until it ran over the stove and then we gathered it up and spread it on the toast. We could not afford to be fastidious.

We ate and drank, and laughed and were happy and cared not a tuppence for all the storms that ever blew!

About midforenoon came a sudden smash at the door, and Jack precipitated himself into our presence. He was masked in snow, but his first glance was at me, and I knew by the sudden drawing of his lips the relief it was to see me safe and well.

"I was afraid for you, Frank," he said; "afraid you'd try it."

"I did try it." And then I told him the story of my attempt.

"We have a great deal to be thankful for," Jack said, soberly, when I had finished. "A very great deal, indeed."

"Yes, more than you know," I returned, joyously, eager to spread the good news. "Jean has consented to be my wife."

Jack refused to be excited. "Congratulations, old boy," he said, pressing my hand, "but, really, that is hardly a news item. Jean has been—well, on the point of consent for a long, long while."

"Oh, Jack, that isn't fair!"

"Sorry, sister, perhaps it isn't quite. But you two have been so beastly slow over this business you've tied up the whole progress of events, and now you want me to be surprised about something that's long overdue."

"Well, it's settled now, anyway," said I, "and as soon as you and Marjorie can make up your minds we will fix a date."

"As soon as Marjorie and I can make up our minds!" Jack exclaimed. "Son, our minds were made up months ago. We've been waiting, waiting. At last we've concluded that we really must speed things up a little, so it was arranged that Marjorie would send you over here last night, and I would accidentally miss you in the gully and go over to Marjorie's. Of course, we didn't know there was a storm coming. It rather overdid things from a conventional point of view, but fortunately Mrs. Grundy hasn't moved out here yet."

"Why, I never thought of such a thing!" cried Jean, indignantly. "How can you?"

"Of course you didn't, you old dear," said Jack, drawing her within his arm, "and, I'll bet a wedding present, neither did Frank. And listen, little woman, you're getting one of the best little chums and one of the whitest men beyond the Red river and the Rockies—and beyond. And as for you, you old son-of-a-gun," punching me in the ribs, "if there are two angels in the world today one of them is Jean Lane."

Although the storm still raged daylight now struggled through the wind-swept screen of snow, and there was no great danger in making the short trip from Twenty-two to Fourteen. Jack confessed that Marjorie was uneasy for me so I went home very soon after his arrival.

Marjorie flew into my arms as I opened the door. "I was so frightened, Frank, so frightened!" she whispered, in half sobs. "I didn't know it was going to be such a storm. I was almost sure you'd come back and when you didn't I couldn't help wondering, and every little while through the night I would wake and see you fighting in the snow; fighting, and stumbling, and falling." She wrapped her arms about me and pressed her cheek against my face. "Oh Frank, Frank, it's good to have you here!" she murmured.

I had never known Marjorie to be so demonstrative. She came of solid old Eastern stock that carries its heart a long, long way in. I was not psychologist enough to realize that if ever there was to be a time when Marjorie would be very human she was now entering it.

"There, there," I said, comforting her as best I could. "It's all over now. And listen—I have great news. Jean and I are to be—"

"At last!" she interrupted. "Well, that shows what a little planning will do. You dear old silly, did you suppose—"

"I know all about it—now, Jack confessed. But your little joke nearly cost me my life," and I went on to tell of my battle with the storm, taking care that it should lose nothing in the telling. In this I hope I measured up to the established standard of the typical Westerner.

Marjorie was penitent. "I am so sorry," she said. "I had no idea that might happen. Oh, Frank, wouldn't it have been dreadful?"

"It would, but it isn't. On the contrary, it is worth it."

Spook drove over one Sunday early in December after an absence of three weeks. We saw his oxen breaking trail for an hour or more before they came up to our door. Jack and Jean had also been coming, and rushed over to Fourteen to share in extending welcome. It is only among the pioneers that real welcomes occur. Jack swept Spook into the house, and I turned our own oxen out and put him in the stable.

We were soon to learn the cause of Spook's absence from our threshold for a full three weeks. It seemed that to protect his extensive supply of personal effects Spook had bought a padlock for his shack, and one frosty morning this padlock fell to the ground. Spook picked it up, and, wishing to use his hands for some other purpose, thrust the iron link of the lock in his mouth, thinking to hold it there a moment. He had no trouble holding it, but suddenly found to his dismay that he couldn't give it up!

The frost in the iron had, with an effect very much like fire, seared his tongue and lung on so tenaciously that when at last he wrenched it out it carried some of the flesh of that tender organ with it.

"I couldn't speak," Spook explained, in telling of his misfortune, "and there were so many things I needed to say just then."

His predicament had been bad enough. For several days he had been unable to eat. "So I've come over here to make up for it," he added.

After the first outburst over Spook's arrival had subsided an embarrassing silence yawned across the path of our conversation. There were great things to be said and no one to say them. The girls glanced shyly at each other, and at us, and Jack, by pantomime behind Spook's back, sought to convey the information that I was elected spokesman. So for lack of preparation I plunged in boldly as one may take a cold dip when he lacks the will power to do it slowly.

"Jack and I have also had a misfortune, of a sort," I said. "We, too, have lost the use of our organs of speech, permanently."

Spook narrowed his eyebrows quizzically. "Then my ears make up for it," he said. "I hear you as usual."

"It isn't in effect yet," I explained.

"We are to be married at Christmas. Behold the parties of the first part."

That Gaunt Phantom of Doubt Closed in Upon Me.

and I waved a hand at Jean and Marjorie while I turned a phrase of Jake's to good account.

Spook sprang to his feet. "Oh, by Jove, how wonderful! What lucky does! Your pardon, ladies, that my first word was to them; I fear my only outweighed my good manners—if I have any left. A bachelor's shack is not exactly a school of polite behavior. It is my visits at Fourteen which have saved me from becoming quite a savage. I—I feel that I should make a speech."

He was as good as his word. Mounting a chair he gave us a bantering dissertation on the joys and perils of married life, to which we listened with much seriousness. But underneath, and running through his words, was something which all his humor did not hide. Spook was playing the game, but I wondered how many little yellow devils were skewering his heart.

The practical part of it was Spook's ready offer of his help in arranging details. The problems of securing the services of a minister and buying the marriage licenses demanded attention. Even so ethereal a thing as marriage cannot entirely escape the humdrum of the material, but it was a time when we felt strangely incapacitated for the commonplace. We were flying too high for earthworms; larks or eagles were our prey.

Jack suggested that we had thought of driving to the nearest railway station, some thirty miles distant, for the ceremony. We understood that a minister was located there and that the young man who ran the poolroom was intrusted with the duty of issuing marriage licenses. He carried a small stock of tobacco as an auxiliary to his pool business and a small stock of jewelry as an auxiliary to his tobacco business and a small stock of wedding licenses as an auxiliary to his jewelry business.

"It would take you two days to make that trip with old Buck and Bright," Spook protested. "Perhaps more; they're soft with being stall-fed and may quit altogether on the road, and you may not find a convenient armful of hay with which to fix them. Fancy having to send word. Wedding postponed on account of the indisposition of Buck and Bright! No, you must leave all these things to me. You boys are too busy with—much more important business—to be worried about details."

Spook made his plans joyously. If he was not happy at heart over the fact that Jean was to marry me no one could have read it in his face. He would have a minister, he would have licenses, he would have wedding rings—leave it all to him.

A week later he came puffing across the crusty prairie, in broad-based Canadian felt.

"Admire my scows," he commanded, as he loved them into view. "Twin schooners of the deep—"

"Traveling in bulk!" Jack interrupted.

"Nay, laden with good tidings. Ah, there she breaks out a line of signals," and Spook started to wig-wag a message which none of us could decipher.

"I fear thee, Ancient Mariner," said Jean, "but what are you driving at?"

"Just this, that the contract is let to one John Locke, minister, the lowest, and in fact, the only bidder. He will be aided and abetted by an individual called Reddy, for reasons which will be obvious when you see him. Reddy, I've Jake, appears to harbor no surname, although no doubt for official purposes he signs something to the marriage license. They will be out by midafternoon Christmas day, and the ceremony will take place in the main drawing room of my country residence on section Two. Carriages at four-thirty. You see, I lost no time in going to town—"

"You to town, with those 'bullocks' of yours!" Jack exclaimed. "And you libeled Buck and Bright by suggesting—"

"I went to town, but not behind my bullocks. There are some things I will not do, even for so great a friendship as I bear for thee. I had a driver and a spanking team of mules."

"Mules? Whose?"

"Our American friend, Burke, lent his team and himself for the occasion. The fact is he had misgivings about lending the team without himself, so he came along. He was afraid I would not treat the mules diplomatically. Nothing, I assure you, was, or is, further from my intention. But, my word, such language! Driving bullocks is only a beginner's course compared with the demands made upon a muleteer. . . . Burke rose very greatly in my estimation."

So we left the details in Spook's hands, glad enough to be rid of responsibility for them. There was much to do, and Jack and I found ourselves banished to Twenty-two while the girls made use of the shanty on Fourteen for operations concerning which we were permitted to have nothing but curiosity. Their wedding splendor must, we knew, be designed with such skill as Marjorie and Jean possessed from the best of the clothing they had brought with them from the East. Love may laugh at locksmiths, but it has to bow to dollars and cents—when the tressouner is under consideration. Money, as Marjorie once remarked, may be bad for the heart, but it's good for the appearance. But there was no money to be had for this occasion, and Marjorie and Jean cut their cloth accordingly, literally as well as figuratively.

Also, the news had to be broken to those at home. Each of us wrote a letter, although, to save postage, we enclosed them all in one envelope. There had been little correspondence since we came to the homesteads, mainly because we were as yet thirty miles from a post office, and letters might lie for a month without a chance of delivery. But this was something to be written about.

I recall that there was moonlight just then, and night on the prairie was a base of ivory cupped with an intangible bowl of blue. Always there was a nip of frost in the air, but it was a nip that was not unpleasant, and by no means did it succeed in confining us within doors. During these bright nights Jean and I took long never-to-be-forgotten walks across the snow-piled, moon-swept plains. I could feel her firm little figure swaying with mine in our strong stride across the wind-packed snow, while our shadows—our shadow, I should say—fell in grotesque caricature by our side. There were moments when we were very, very close to the infinity which bounded us on every hand, and the wonder of that great, white, silent ocean would surge into our hearts and mingle with the wonder of our love. A quarter of a mile from the shanties and we were as isolated from all living things as if we had been let down in the midst of the Polar sea, or drawn by some mighty spirit into the farthest void of space. Even the holiest void paid attention enough to blur our footprints out behind us and so complete that sense of infinity of isolation.

We were so tremendously alone that it seemed the world was full of ourselves and God.

But a gaunt phantom of doubt and uncertainty stalked us even on those moonlit walks.

CHAPTER XI

That gaunt phantom of doubt gradually closed in upon me. I resolved to fight it, but its very intangibility baffled my efforts to throw it off. When I struck, it was not there. When I gripped it, my fingers closed on space. When I challenged Jean's whole-heartedness she burst into tears and asked what proof she could give that she had not given. And it was because she burst into tears that the phantom stalked me all the closer. Had she laughed and called me a silly boy I would have believed her.

Nothing came of it, however, and the days wore on until one forenoon we saw Spook's tall figure looming up across the snow-waste that lay between Fourteen and Two.

We made him welcome, but he would not sit down. "Sorry, but I can't stay," he explained. "Jake is in a bit of a mess. Just came over to Two to tell me about it. It seems the cogitation nut on his base burner—you know the big coal stove Jake puts on so many airs about—bless me if I know what a cogitation nut is; rummy old name, don't you think?—but at any rate it has come loose so Jake posted over to borrow a left-hand monkey wrench with which to tighten it. It seems he can't get at it with an ordinary monkey wrench; must have a left-hand one. I hadn't such a thing about the place, and of course I told him so."

"Danged unfortunate," says Jake—excuse the adjective, ladies—and he stuck out his chin and massaged it in a way that showed he was worried more than he admitted.

"It will be all right, won't it?" said I, trying to buck him up, and really knowing nothing about it.

"Well, it may be, and it may not be," said he. "If we're lucky nothing will come of it."

"And in case you're unlucky?" I queried.

"Then the bottom will fall out of the stove and the shack will burn down—maybe before I get back. We can't leave it without a fire in this weather, you know."

"So seeing that old Jake was in a bit of a mess I volunteered to come over and borrow the necessary tools from you. It took quite a weight off his mind, I assure you."

Jack and Jean, as usual, were with us at the time and from a corner where he was out of the range of Spook's vision Jack was semaphoring me an improvised hush signal.

"Too bad the day is so dull," Jack said, looking out of our window in the direction of Jake's homestead. "Can't see a thing. His shack may be burned by this time. Perhaps Jake and Bella Donna are already on their way here for shelter."

"Oh, surely not!" exclaimed Jean. "Surely that would not happen!"

"Quite possible," her brother insisted, with the firmness of one who is prepared for the worst. "When the cogitation nut works loose you never know what may happen. And the worst of it is we haven't a left-hand wrench on the place."

"You haven't!" said Spook, plainly concerned. "I say, that's rather rotten."

"Isn't it? Your best chance is Burke. Burke has quite a layout of tools, and, besides, he's an ingenious buggar. No doubt he will be able to fix you up."

Marjorie had already drawn a cup of hot tea, and Spook drank it while he stood.

"Ah, that's better," said he, as she took the empty cup from his hand. "Wonderful how a cup of tea bucks a fellow up, isn't it? Now I must get along. Fanny old Jake on his back under the stove holding that nut in place with his fingers!"

"Or with Bella Donna's curling tongs," Jack suggested. "Burke will fix you all right," and we waved him away.

It was one of those gray winter days, and he faded out of sight in a few moments. I noticed that Jean's eyes followed Spook until the mist had engulfed him. Then she turned quickly to Jack and me.

"If there is any danger, don't you think you should go to Jake's at once?" she said.

This fool's errand may be funny, but the result may be serious. Who can tell?

Reminded

"The storm burst upon us so suddenly and violently that we had no warning of its approach," said the tornado victim, relating his experiences to a friend. "In an instant the house was demolished and scattered to the four winds. How I escaped being torn to pieces, I do not know! We—"

"G—good gracious!" said Mr. Meeke, jumping to his feet. "That reminds me! I—I almost forgot to post a letter for my wife!"

By Direct Command

"They were discussing the advent of their baby sister, but neither could give a satisfactory explanation of the new arrival."

At last the elder boy said: "I know how it was."

"How?" asked his brother.

"Why," he exclaimed, with an air of relief and decision. "God said, 'Let there be Phyllis,' and there was Phyllis."

ELECTRICITY TO THE FARMER

Definite steps toward establishing experimental farm electrification lines in Oklahoma were taken at the farm electrification conference in Oklahoma City recently. Representatives of the Oklahoma Utilities Association, electric light and power companies, state board of agriculture, A. & M. College at Stillwater, several farm organizations and the Oklahoma Farmer-Stockman were in attendance.

The purpose of the experimental lines is to determine to what extent farmers are willing to take the service, also the class of equipment necessary and to gain scientific information on rates that will be fair and profitable both to the light and power companies and the farmers.

Such experiments are being carried on in other states and much of the manual labor on farms will soon be done by electrified machinery just as it is in the cities. This is being accomplished through cooperation of private electric power companies with the farmers in their territory, to ascertain their needs and the cheapest and most efficient manner in which they can be supplied.

The MAYFLOWER WOMEN

TO THE WOMEN OF THE MAYFLOWER
Landed in 1620

By JOHN DICKINSON SHERMAN

LL VISITORS to Plymouth Rock—and they numbered something like 250,000 last summer—manifested great interest in the memorial to "Women of the Mayflower", which has been erected by the Daughters of the American Revolution. The feature of this memorial is the statue of a woman clad with the severe simplicity that tradition has handed down to us as the hall-mark of the women of "Plymouth Plantation." This figure is intended to represent "The Pilgrim Maid." Anyway, the woman is comely and distingue. The woman and her costume seem to go together—a natural combination. Altogether she's so easy to look at that she might be the counterfeit presentment of the fair Priscilla Mullins herself—the damsel who brought John Alden to time, when he went courting as proxy for Capt. Miles Standish, by archly remarking, "Why don't you speak for yourself, John?"

It was noted that none of the visitors was more interested in "The Pilgrim Maid" than the extraordinary young woman of the day—the so-called flapper. And the flapper she was, the more she seemed to be interested. That's no wonder, for a greater contrast can scarcely be imagined. It's much easier to believe that "Julia O'Grady and the Colonel's lady are sisters under their skin" than to realize that the flapper represents three hundred years of development by the American woman from the Mayflower woman. A symposium of the thoughts of the flapper visitors would be exceedingly interesting—and doubtless important—for the looks of the flapper are at wide variance with her mental processes, which are often many and shrewd.

It is exceedingly fitting that this memorial to the Mayflower women should have been erected by a latter-day nation-wide organization of patriotic women. The "Fighting Daughters" seek to keep alive the spirit and deeds of their forebears of the Revolution. Tribute by the D. A. R. to the Mayflower women is "praise from Sir Hubert, indeed." And who can doubt that the hard-won success of the Pilgrim Fathers was largely due to the Pilgrim Mothers? In times of stress and privation it is ever the loyal devotion and heroic self-sacrifice of loving woman which evoke the admiration of mankind. And they are hard to learn in detail from the pages of history. It is the men whose deeds are set forth.

Capt. Miles Standish, for example, has a much larger statue at Duxbury than "The Pilgrim Maid" has at Plymouth. But Captain Standish was the Indian fighter of the colony, though he was not even a member of the church, and Priscilla turned him down. So his statue is fourteen feet high and weighs several tons. Incidentally, it has been struck by lightning and the head and left arm knocked off.

Thanksgiving Day is a national holiday peculiarly our own. It is the day on which we Americans as a Christian people give thanks to that Divine

PUMPKIN PIE International

Providence which has so often interposed to assist our progress as a nation. And surely no people have so much cause for thanksgiving. Today the United States of America is the most happy, prosperous and powerful nation of earth. So it is most natural that at Thanksgiving time the national thought should go back to Plymouth Rock where three hundred years ago the observance of Thanksgiving Day had its origin.

But Thanksgiving is a day of feasting, family reunions and jollity, as well as of thanksgiving. So it is in keeping with the spirit of the day to make review of the Mayflower women—from witchcraft to pumpkin pie.

The Pilgrim woman was evidently a woman of common sense. And, like "a good deed in a naughty world," a woman with the saving graces of common sense is a "joy forever," whether or no she is a "thing of beauty." How do we know that the Pilgrim woman had any unusual amount of common sense? Well, there's the witchcraft craze, for one thing.

Salem and Boston, you know, were at one time obsessed by a witchcraft frenzy. These were Puritan settlements. This frenzy was so violent that women were hanged for being witches. And if the records of the time do the fair sex no wrong, it was usually a woman who brought the accusation of witchcraft and testified in court to the most extraordinary details of witchcraft.

The Plymouth women refused to have any part in the witchcraft craze. There were, if memory serves, but two witchcraft cases in the colony. The first case was that of Dinah Sylvester, who accused Mrs. Holmes of witchcraft. She told in court how she saw her neighbor plotting evil with the Devil himself, who had assumed for the occasion the form of a bear. Evidently a terrible case of witchcraft!

The court, nevertheless, refused to believe either in the witchcraft of Mrs. Holmes or in the Devil-bear. It acquitted Mrs. Holmes. Moreover, it decided that Dinah Sylvester's charge was just slander, plain and simple. So it gave Dinah Sylvester her choice between paying Mrs. Holmes five English pounds as damages for that slander or being publicly whipped. And the women of Plymouth approved the verdict. Several years later the second case came to trial and was laughed out of court.

Then, too, the Mayflower women were a cleanly lot. And cleanliness in a woman is high among the virtues. You'd like potatoes, wouldn't you, Priscilla? Now, darling, do say "Yes" and make me the happiest man in the world. Ill, bring some Vienna rolls, waitress."

Obliging Mackerel

The mackerel in the waters around South Portland, Maine, are the most obliging in the history of ichthyology. They are so accommodating, in fact, they threaten to put fishermen thereabouts out of business.

While fishermen were 20 miles out to sea. The authentic records of the Mayflower's long voyage do not reveal how these Pilgrim women kept clean at sea. For they had some very rough weather; and the Mayflower, though seaworthy, was not much of a ship. She was of only 180 tons. She had 102 passengers—men, women and children—and of course a crew. And she was loaded to the last inch of available space with household goods and the wherewithal for the new colony.

The records set forth that some of the Mayflower women were seafarers. And seafarers—the real seafarers, when you are not afraid that you will die, but are afraid that you will not—will play havoc with the ideals of us that American institution.

Anyway, what was the very first thing these Pilgrim women did—after the Mayflower had anchored inside Cape Cod and they had upon their knees given thanks to "the God in Heaven, who had brought them over the vast and furious ocean, and delivered them from all the perils and miseries thereof, againe to set their feet on the firme and stable earth, their proper element?"

Why, these Mayflower women proceeded to have one grand wash-day! And the "pumpkin pie"—and why anyone should say "pumpkin pie" is one of the mysteries, even if one feels obliged to write it that way. It would never do to lose sight of the fact that it was the Mayflower women who gave us that American institution.

When the Mayflower women arrived they found the Indian practicing a wonderfully simple and logical kind of agriculture. He—or rather she, for the squaws did all the work—made a hole, dropped in several grains of corn and a climbing bean. Between the corn rows the squaw planted pumpkin seeds. When the pumpkin was ripe it was stewed and eaten, either by itself or mixed with corn or beans or dried berries.

And it was out of this inspired pumpkin that the genius of the Mayflower women evolved the pumpkin pie. And what would be Thanksgiving—much like "Hamlet" with Hamlet left out. Oh, yes; "most pie is good, but along about the last Thursday in November the Mayflower woman's contribution to the upbuilding of the nation is a sure-enough headline on the bill of fare. Millions of Thanksgiving feasters who don't know that there's any difference between Pilgrim and Puritan will rise up and call her blessed.

searching in vain for a good catch of mackerel for a canning factory, a big school of mackerel swam through the open space in the breakwater and directly to the canning factory wharfs. The fish were easily netted, and by the time the fishermen returned with a small catch the fish had been salted down in barrels.

The House of Plenty

by William Herschel
In Indianapolis, Ind.

I KNOW a house where Plenty seems to practice magic arts,
Though humble is this house I know, and humble all its hearts.

Within this house a Mother dwells whom Plenty gives the skill
To make a little grow to much that all may have their fill.

I've seen her lay the table, with but two or three to fare,
But bread had not been broken when a legion came to share.

A knock—a word of welcome—Parson Pray was at the door.

No, Parson Pray just couldn't stay—he had not time to eat—
But was there not some soup to tempt a sick man down the street?

"Come, rest a moment, Brother Pray, and have a little bite;
I'm glad you thought about the soup—I'll tend to that all right."

By magic came some steaming broth from out a magic pan;
"I saved this broth for such as he—we'll send it to the man."

Came ham from off the pantry shelf, came jam and marmalade;
A cackle at the kitchen door announced eggs freshly laid.

Ere Parson Pray could utter grace new knocks were at the door;
"Can you spare just a little bread? They've none down at the store."

"For pity's sake! That shows the way some grocery stores are run; I've biscuits baking in the stove! Just wait—they're nearly done!"

Glad House of Plenty, glorified, you seem somehow to know
Where loaves and fishes can be found—as in the long ago.

You seem to make Thanksgiving Day abide throughout the year,
So bounteous are your feasts, so mother-blessed your cheer!

The MOST POPULAR THANKSGIVING BIRD

WITH apologies to the bald eagle, it is appropriate to refer to the turkey as the great American bird. The association of this species of fowl with the Thanksgiving day festivities places it upon the highest pinnacle of fame. The few specimens taken back to Spain by Christopher Columbus aroused the greatest curiosity and interest in that country, and subsequent imports of the bird within fifty years stirred Europe to its center. The turkey—pavo or peacock in Spain, dindon in France, trutkahn in Germany, and kalkun in Scandinavian countries—was found by millions in the forests of North America, Central America and Mexico when the white men came to the western shores.

The name given to the turkey is a little obscure, but it seems to have arisen in London from an almost trivial circumstance. It appears that about the time of the birth of Queen Elizabeth a hardy navigator brought a consignment of these birds from America to the London market. Purvoyors of the aristocratic houses of London found them, bought them, tried them, and then wanted more. London tradesmen were asked the name of the fowl, and because everything then was brought from Turkey, those asking for the information were told that they came from Turkey, and they were known for many years in the London markets as those "Turkey birds." This is one of many tales told to account for the strange naming of the American bird, and is probably as good as any. The turkey has been domesticated, as far as it is possible, and long ago became a large factor in domestic commerce.

Once Turkey State.

Rhode Island for many years held chief prominence as the turkey-raising state.

Now Tennessee, Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska and Kentucky dispute supremacy and literally send millions of these birds annually to market to be consumed largely at Thanksgiving and Christmas feasts.

The scientific name given the turkey is Meleagris. Meleager, in an ancient Greek legend, was leader of the Calydonian hunt, who saved the beautiful Princess Atalanta from the savage attack of a wild boar, and thereby gained fame. This scientific name seems just about as applicable to the great American bird as turkey, but it has the approval of science, and that is enough. Three varieties made up the original stock of wild turkeys on this continent. They were the gallinavo of New England and the greater part of North America, the ocellata of Honduras and the mexicana of Mexico. A fourth variety is supposed to have inhabited the West India Islands, from which the birds taken to Spain by Columbus were obtained. From these, in the course of 400 years, six varieties have been evolved, known as the bronze, Narragansett, buff, slate, white and black. The white and black birds are "freaks" from the three original species.

The turkey has never been more than half domesticated. It is still essentially a wild bird. It roams the fields in flocks, feeds upon insects and stray grains during the late summer and fall months and only seeks the shelter of the barnyard when the food supply fails. Young turkeys seem to distrust man and all his works, and each generation of turkeys has to be tamed. The birds do become quite docile under careful management, but the hen turkey forever seeks the wild in which to steal her nest and rear her young. Testimony is not lacking that it costs less to raise a turkey than any other fowl, and to the ultimate consumer in the Thanksgiving and Christmas period they cost more than any other fowl, so that somebody makes a good profit on the annual product.

One of the Oldest Birds.

The turkey is doubtless one of the oldest birds in America and always occupied an important place in the domestic life of the Indians. The Pilgrims at Plymouth learned the value of the turkey from the Massasoit Indians. Cortez was feasted upon turkey in Mexico and Peru. The Maya people embodied the turkey in their oldest hieroglyphics and the scientists of the Smithsonian, delving among the ruins of Arizona, found a mummified turkey, and the remains of nearly all the cliff and cave dwellers in the Southwest give up the bones of the turkey. It was a staple food among the red men from the earliest times, as it has come to be in civilized lands around the globe.

Benjamin Franklin desired to make the turkey the national bird, but was outvoted by others, who seemed to find a truer connection between the bald eagle and the indomitable spirit of the American republic. It may be the screaming eagle better suits the ways of war and poets' dreams, but the turkey occupies a specially warm place in the affections of the American people. At Thanksgiving and Christmas time he is king of birds, and will so remain to the end of time. —Washington Star.

A bonbon wrapped in paper is tied to each one of them with baby ribbon, which also serves to hang them on the tree.

Gifts for Girls

Pretty hair ornaments are always included in the list of gifts that girls will like. The most fashionable ones this year are bands and coronels made of silver ribbon, and flower wreaths made of colored tinsel ribbons. Stupid Joke That Had Tragic Ending

In Nebraska, the Jensens and Thors live on nearby farms in the Pilger neighborhood. A few days ago Mrs. Thor left for a trip to Denmark, and Jensen, something of a jester, meeting Thor the day after, told him that while Mrs. Thor was gone he wanted Thor to put his property in his wife's name because he, Jensen, was going to marry her when she returned. Thor is a steady, hard-working, prosperous farmer. A few days later he met Jensen in a store and asked him if he meant what he said. "Yes," said Jensen, smiling. Thor shot him and killed him where he stood. . . . That is the danger of joking with a man who has no sense of humor. Thor gave himself up. His wife, wired for, has returned, as much surprised as anybody, to say that Jensen had no talk with her about getting married, that he merely was a neighbor. Every real comedy, the critics say, has an element of tragedy in it. Jensen's last joke had.—Capper's Weekly.

Irish Fight Vaccination

Vaccination is compulsory in the Irish Free State, but during the troubles of the last few years the enforcement of the law has been allowed to lapse. In many places the children have not been vaccinated for ten years. The government is now urging the local boards of health to insist on vaccination and to prosecute defaulters. But a feeling has grown up against vaccination and in Wexford the local authorities have refused to obey the government's instructions. The provision in the English law exempting from vaccination conscientious objectors to it does not apply to Ireland.

HOW TO SOLVE A CROSS-WORD PUZZLE

When the correct letters are placed in the white spaces this puzzle will spell words both vertically and horizontally. The first letter in each word is indicated by a number, which refers to the definition listed below the puzzle. Thus No. 1 under the column headed "horizontal" defines a word which will fill the white spaces up to the first black square to the right, and a number under "vertical" defines a word which will fill the white squares to the next black one below. No letters go in the black spaces. All words used are dictionary words, except proper names. Abbreviations, slang, initials, technical terms and obsolete forms are indicated in the definitions.

The 14th annual convention of Arizona Confederation of Labor was held in Phoenix last week. Practically all cities of the state were represented by delegates at the gathering.

The biggest program of sports and the most elaborate amusement offering ever crowded into a single week in Arizona was that given at the Arizona Free State Fair, in Phoenix.

In building the new cutoff on the Nogales-Tucson road, the state highway was donated fourteen miles of right-of-way, on proviso that it be fenced, on both sides. The fencing has started.

Suit asking for $10,000 for alienation of affections was filed in the superior court at Phoenix last week by Gerald Pepper of Miami, against Edward S. Mayfield, manager of a Phoenix dance hall.

Central school children at Bisbee have outplayed their equipment for recreation which is being torn down to be replaced by new playthings. Other improvements are also being made at the school.

The gloom cast over the camp following the fire in the Aztec mine has long since vanished, recent activities have cast a spirit of optimism through the district. The renewing of work in the Aztec has placed many men at work.

Charges against Ralph Walker, regional director of the Veterans' bureau for Arizona, were presented to a group of United States senators who stopped over at Prescott on their inspection trip through the Colorado river basin.

The October Industrial survey report recently issued from the office of the U. S. Employment Service of the U. S. Department of Labor at Denver states that the general trend in practically all lines of industry and employment is upward. Agricultural activities affording steady employment to all local field workers.

Hundreds of field workers are employed for a few weeks in cultivating the winter lettuce crop in the Salt River Valley. Industrial plant activity in general, steady. Sawmills in the Flagstaff district, where labor is a little scarce, continue running at capacity. Cotton gins in the Salt River Valley, Yuma and Tucson districts running overtime. Metal mining activities are especially brisk in the Bisbee, Tombstone, Jerome, Ajo, Globe-Miami, Patagonia, Kingman and Crown King districts. Metal mine labor generally adequate, except that experienced hard-rock miners would find little difficulty in securing employment. Silver-lead and asbestos fields are especially active. A smelter plant at Humboldt is expected to reopen the first part of November. Building is brisk, and excepting a small shortage of bricklayers and plasterers, building and general construction labor is adequate to supply immediate demands. Major construction under way or indicated to commence soon, includes a $15,000,000 new railway line east and west through Phoenix (grade work now engaging 400 men); a $6,000,000 leaching plant at Miami; the Horse Mesa dam and the Mormon Flats power plant. Two hundred and fifty workers have recently been employed on the lining of an irrigation canal with cement in the Roosevelt conservation district east of Mesa. A considerable improvement in employment connected with highway construction is noted. Employment in railroad activities normal.

The state Supreme Court at Phoenix upheld the judgment of the lower court in the conviction of William Lawrence of Muskegon, Okla., who was sentenced to be hanged for the murder of Haze Burch, Phoenix policeman, last February.

J. R. Apperson, representative of five eastern produce houses, told the directors of the chamber of commerce and mines at Douglas that a larger and more profitable yield of Valencia onions will be raised in Cochise county the coming year.

Senator Cameron of Arizona, at the instigation of western settlers, has initiated a move to unite western, middle western and southern senators in demanding a liberalization of credit to farmers by intermediate credit banks. He would favor farm paper receiving a more preferred treatment.

The recent gasoline tax brought $75,089.83 in the state and county treasuries during the month of September. It is shown by a report issued in Phoenix by Secretary of State James H. Kerby. The tax is figured on 2,469,556 gallons of gasoline sold during the month.

The sulphide ore bodies in the underground workings of the Shannon Copper Company at Gleason are still burning and the result sought by setting the workings afire is believed to have been accomplished, according to William Saunderscock, who is in charge of the Shannon properties.

Court action to compel Governor Hunt to countersign two warrants for $400 each, drawn in favor of Mulford Winsor, president of the Senate, was started in Phoenix with the filing of an application in the Supreme Court for praemortory writ of mandamus.

EMBELLISHING TAILORED SUIT; WIDE-BRIM HATS AGAIN HERE

IT IS a cunning art which can add embellishing touches and librium to a costume without detracting from its tailored aspect. Yet this is just what the French couturier accomplishes, a tailored suit which has ornate features. The illustration herewith demonstrates this truth. Note in the stunning suit to the right how fancifully for and braid combine in a decorative way, yet rumor become fact. However, let it not be inferred that the little close-fitting shapes which have served us so faithfully and becomingly are to be crowded off the stage of fashion. Perish the thought! The small hat has won a fixed place in our esteem, and for all-around practicality and smart style it has no peer. However, there is something about the broader brim tailored is the word, when it comes to describing this elegant cloth creation. One of the charming items concerning this model is that it is carried out all in tones of gray. This is according to the dictates of the mode, that gray be a leading color for this season. The cloth is platinum-gray wool velours, the fur, handsome squirrel. Across the front of the coat the fur appears in tabs, but it encircles the back portion in a continuous wide border. The plain skirt has the fashionable inverted plait, which allows fullness.

It is the introduction of flares turned of gazelle fur at the sides of the coat and the bottom of the sleeves which pronounces chic for the coat of the accompanying suit. Likewise the flare cuffs are of cinnamon-brown gazelle, the collar also is faced with the same—in conjunction, however, with flat dull gold braid. There are little strappings of this braid at vantage points throughout the costume, and this partly accounts for its true Parisian air. Evidently the designer decided that two inverted plait which seems to "complete the picture," and it is very pleasing to know that fashion approves both brimless and brimmed headwear. The fact that honors are to be shared gives a zestful interest to the season's millinery modes.

The quartette of charming wide-brim chapeaux here shown are typical of the trend of fashion. The ornate treatment evidenced in the hat shown last in the group emphasizes the "more trimming" movement. It is carried out in amber and brown colorings. The brim is a transparent metal tissue with dull gold soutache sewed row and row as a wide border. There is a banded effect of the soutache encircling the satin sectional crown. The chrysanthemums, one on top and one on the underside of the brim, shade from orange to brilliant henna. This model would be exquisite carried out in black and silver, for silver is particularly in favor this season.

A rocco ribbon wreath of flowers is festooned about the crown of the are better than one when it comes to allowing extra fullness at the hemline of the skirt. The smooth-surfaced cloth is in the new blue coloring. Novelty is achieved in semi-tailored suits through solid embroidery done in self-colored floss. Even beads are sometimes introduced.

Are we going to wear large hats this fall and winter? We are. At last the wide brim has arrived to fill its long-delayed return engagement with the world of fashion. Thus does handsome hat pictured to the left center. It has one of the widest brims now so fashionable. A handsome ostrich novelty adds picturesqueness to the bebrimmed velvet and satin shape which is shown first in this group. Leaves cut out of velvet are applied on the felt crown of the model to the upper right. A silver ribbon traces its way about the crown, finishing in a pert bow.

The True Spirit of The Holidays

Again the joyous holidays approach. This is reflected in the preparations of stores everywhere.

The true holiday spirit in a store is not a matter of decoration.

The real spirit comes from behind the counter—from the salespeople wherever they may be in the Store.

This Store is proud of its salesfolk, for to them to serve helpfully and courteously is to attain the high ideals of modern salesmanship.

The holiday season cheers them to serve with even greater than their usual helpfulness. Their gift to you is to be one of painstaking service.
