CIRCLE Z RANCH ENTERTAINS AT INFORMAL PARTY

Thursday night Carl and Lee Zinsmeister, president and secretary, respectively, of the Circle Z ranch entertained a party of cowboys and Patagonia friends at an informal reception in the magnificent lounge of the main building. Entertainment was provided with a large photograph and moving pictures taken by Leo Zinsmeister at the ranch. The cowboys present were enabled to see themselves as others see them when they are on the "hurricane deck" of a bucking broncho. Sy Swyers gave a perfect imitation of a high diver, but Jack Davis showed his usual good form by remaining in the saddle. The guests included, besides the hosts: C. L. Northcraft, Jack Davis, Jess Gatlin, Mr. Thurber, J. R. Collier, E. F. Bohlinger, Mr. and Mrs. Sy Swyers, Mr. and Mrs. Sam Foster, Bert and R. C. Blabon, Bud McCormick, John Burton, Frank Krupp, and Howard Keener.

The Circle Z took in its first cash when one of the guests "chucked out," leaving three copper pennies on the counter. The beginning of the ranch profits was placed in the safe, where it is hoped it will produce "seed" that will multiply millions of times each year.

If a dog cannot bark, how is he going to let you know that the house is on fire or that someone is moving the liquor out of the cellar?

Doubtless the modern language cranks would change "Well done, good and faithful servant" to "Atta boy!"

If you can't boost this mining camp, don't knock it. It's going to boom!

"Like People"—Says Lincoln "And Make Life One Holiday"

The jovial Joseph C. Lincoln, when not describing the characters of Cape Cod or collecting antiques, fairly radiates good fellowship and companionship. He is the most gregarious of authors. His twinkling eye, his warm hand-clasp, his chuckle over the radio are known to thousands from Maine to Oregon. This deep humanity has never been more clearly expressed than in his latest novel, "Rugged Water."

About Lincoln there is a modesty and even a diffidence rare in the eminently successful. He chuckles with the world and at it, and quite openly at himself. But when he laughs at others there is always a note of tenderness and sympathy beneath his mirth. He laughs at humanity but he loves it.

"If you like people," says Lincoln, "you've gone far toward making life a holiday. I don't mean holiday in the sense of a day without work, but in the warm spirit of fellowship which we associate with Christmas, with Easter, with our birthdays and those of our friends. And this pleasant sense of fellowship carries with it an equally pleasant obligation. This is to spread it; to pass on the happiness that others give to you; not to fail in the little thoughtful acts of remembrance which soften all of life.

"This is most clearly brought home to me by the greetings of my

The Old Woodpile

Reprinted, by permission, from February "Smart Set"

IN THE back yard under the maple tree, That's where the woodpile used to be, A rickety saw-buck, the battered edge, The second-beat ax, with the blunted edge— You'd spit on your hands, and saw and saw— When your dad was around! His word was law!

Dad, maybe, drove for the mail to town; Then a window opened and Maw looked down— And you on the saw-buck, moppin' your head, Sayin' by jiminy, wish you was dead! And then Maw smiled and told you tales Of young Abe Lincoln, a-splittin' rails, But you reckoned you wouldn't be President, If you chopped for a lifetime! Then Maw went— Hollerin' back, "Fore you could begin: "I'm bakin' a puddin' with raisins in!"

'Twas dusk and the crickets callin', when Dad drove up the lane from town The big box back of the stove overflowed. With the wood you'd chopped! The fire glowed! And supper was ready! You took your place, Between the two, and your dad said grace: You gulped your vittles, so you could begin Eatin' the puddin' with raisins in!

IF YOU could go back to the maple tree, Back where the woodpile used to be, Wouldn't you make the old chips fly? Wouldn't you pile the wood-box high?— What would you do when your dad said grace And you saw the light on your Mother's face— If you were offered one golden day, Out of your boyhood—what would you say?

SHERIFF BROWN'S FORCE TO GET AFTER AUTOISTS WITHOUT 1926 LICENSES ON CARS

Sheriff Harold J. Brown has requested The Patagonian to warn all automobile owners that January 31 is the last day that his force will tolerate the absence of 1926 license plates on their cars. After that date arrests will be made of all failing to heed this warning.

The sheriff further wishes to inform tourists that they must secure a "visitor's" tag if they remain in the county 24 hours, and if they remain 30 days they must secure a state license for their cars or suffer arrest.

Remember that before the county recorder's office can issue you a license for your car you must have a certificate of title, which can be secured only from the secretary of state at Phoenix.

No favoritism will be shown in the enforcement of the law relating to licenses, so if you are caught in the net you have no one to blame but yourself.

ELECTION CALLED FOR FEB. 6TH TO VOTE ON UNION HIGH SCHOOL

Two petitions, one signed by a majority of the trustees of the following districts and one signed by more than 100 qualified school electors of the same districts, for the formation of a Union High School district were filed in the office of the county school superintendent, Mrs. Grace A. Farrell, on January 20, 1926: Patagonia No. 6, Canille No. 10, Alto No. 17, Sonita No. 25, Elgin No. 20, Rain Valley No. 26, Vaughn No. 27, Red Rock No. 22, Parker Canyon No. 11, Lochiel No. 9, Washington Camp No. 12, Mowry No. 16, and Harshaw No. 7.

Pursuant to the procedure as outlined in the law, paragraph 2771, an election has been called by the county school superintendent and will be held in each of these above districts on February 6, 1926, for the determination of this question.

Mrs. Farrell wishes to make it plain to the qualified school electors of the above-named districts that a majority of the votes cast in the entire territory will decide the question. Each district represented on the petition must abide by the majority of votes cast in the combined districts. Should any district neglect to hold such election, such district must abide by the majority vote.

If you want a Union High School in the upper part of the county so you will not have to send your children away from home to complete their education, see to it that you get to the polls and vote "yes" on the ballot.

NATIONAL RADIO FADING TESTS START FEBRUARY 9TH

Dates for the national tests of radio reception to determine the causes of static and fading were announced this week after 4000 of the 4500 designated observation stations had expressed a willingness to take part in the survey, which is being conducted by the Stewart-Warner Speedometer Corporation in cooperation with the Northwestern University. The first test will be held on the night of February 9th, from 8 to 11 o'clock central standard time. The second and third will be on the two succeeding nights at the same hours. Subsequent trials will be held throughout the winter, should the data obtained indicate that real progress in a search for the causes of these two major radio annoyances is possible.

It was originally planned to hold these tests in January, but, owing to the international tests scheduled for this month, it was decided to hold the fading and static tests at a later date.

Most of the observations will be made by broadcast listeners using standard receiving sets and depending for the accuracy of their reports upon their own ears. However, to insure the scientific accuracy of the result, 20 control stations equipped with electrical measuring devices and automatic recorders will be placed in the principal broadcasting centers of the country.

SPLENDID MUSICAL ATTRACTION IN NOGALES, JAN. 25 AND 26

Columbia Ladies' Orchestra to Appear at Lyric Theater Under Auspices of Ridge-Igo Post American Legion

Announcement was made in Nogales several days ago that the Columbia Ladies' Orchestra would appear in concerts next Monday and Tuesday evenings at the Lyric Theater under auspices of Ridge-Igo Post of the American Legion.

Nogales is fortunate in securing this musical attraction, as the orchestra is one of the finest musical organizations of its kind in the country and is completing its third tour of the United States and Canada.

The unique organization is composed entirely of young women and is one of the most pleasing musical organizations before the public today. Mme. Frances Knight, the conductor, has been very careful in selecting her musicians, and has only the very best performers in the orchestra, each being a soloist on the instrument she plays.

Space forbids a resume of the press notices on the concerts given by the orchestra, but the comment, wherever the ladies have appeared, has been highly complimentary.

Nogales Legionnaires are confident that this musical attraction will prove pleasing to the people of Santa Cruz county as that the concerts will draw capacity houses, due to the popular price of admission.

HISTORY SKETCHES

The Liberty Bell

On New Year's Eve the tones of the Liberty Bell were broadcast by radio for the first time in history, when 1-9-24 was tapped out by Mrs. W. Freeland Kendrick, wife of the mayor of Philadelphia, announcing the dawn of the new year; a year to be made memorable by the Sesquicentennial International Exposition commemorating the 150th anniversary of American independence.

The famous relic has not been rung since 1835, when it cracked as it tolled the sad tidings of the funeral of Chief Justice John Marshall. Since then it has been lightly tapped twice, once on February 11, 1915, when its reverberations were caught up by telephone and carried across the continent.

The Liberty Bell was originally cast by Thomas Lister of Whitechapel, London, and arrived in Philadelphia in the latter part of August, 1752. It was then known as the Province Bell. It was hung on trusses in Independence Square to try out its tone before it was raised to the tower.

Early in September "it was cracked by a stroke of the clapper during a test without any violence," according to a contemporary account, and was recast. It was recast twice in Philadelphia. For some time it hung in the steeple of Independence Hall, where it remained until the steeple was taken down, July 16, 1781. Then it was lowered into the brick tower, where it remained until 1846. During the following years it was moved several times and was finally placed in its present position in Independence Hall.

Few people realize the dimensions of the bell. The circumference around the lip is 12 feet, around the crown 7 feet 6 inches, from the lip to the crown it is 3 feet, and its weight is 2080 pounds.

The greatest event in the history of the bell was recorded when its tones pealed forth to announce the proclamation of the adoption of the Declaration of Independence on July 8, 1776, and by so doing gained for itself the name by which it has since become famous.

Things never are as bad as they seem. There are still millions of Chicanos who have never killed anybody yet.

Rough Rider Under Roosevelt, Veteran of World War, Mining Engineer, Gen. Mgr. Inspiration Co.

New York, Jan. 19.—John Campbell Greenway, 53, Arizona mining engineer, veteran of two wars, one time Yale football hero and all around athlete, died at 1:10 o'clock this afternoon in Roosevelt hospital following an operation. He had been a patient in the hospital a week, coming here from his home in Ajo, Ariz.

Mr. Greenway was a Rough Rider in the Spanish-American war and Col. Roosevelt's favorite lieutenant. In later years he took an active part in politics in the southwest and was a staunch supporter of Roosevelt.

Mr. Greenway was married to Mrs. Selmes Monroe Ferguson of Santa Barbara, Calif., November 4, 1923.

With Mr. Greenway when he died were his wife, Mrs. Mary Greenway, and his brothers, Dr. James Cowan Greenway, one time New York physician, now a lecturer in Yale, and Gilbert Greenway, of New York. Mr. Greenway also leaves a son, John B. Greenway, 2 years old.

Deceased was born in Huntsville, Ala., July 6, 1872, the son of Gilbert Christian and Alice White Greenway. He was a student in the University of Virginia and then entered Yale University, where in 1895 he was graduated with the degree of Ph.D. degree. He was president of his class.

Mr. Greenway formerly was a member of the board of regents of the university of Arizona and had served as chairman of the defense committee of the council of defense for Arizona. He was a member of the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers, Yale Engineering Society, Phi Kappa Psi and was president of the Yale Club of Arizona.

Ajo, Ariz., Jan. 20.—Funeral services for General John C. Greenway, who died in New York yesterday, will be held here at 9 o'clock Tuesday morning. Burial will be on a knoll south of the Greenway residence. Business houses in the city will be closed all day.

Chairman of International Radio Week

Powell Crosley, Jr., prominent radio manufacturer, has been appointed Chairman of International Radio Week. During this week, beginning January 24, tests will be conducted in broadcasting between Europe and America. The new American super-power stations should result in better reception than has ever before been attained in transoceanic broadcasting. Crosley was recently elected Vice President of the National Association of Broadcasters.

Elephant's Cold Cured with Bag over Trunk

When circus elephants catch a cold, inhaling boiling vinegar sometimes proves effective as a cure. The "med-

Speeding Up Patents

Although 1,900 more applications and 30,000 more amendments were received at the patent office during the last fiscal year as compared to the year before, 16,000 fewer cases were awaiting action at the close of the period, according to the patent commissioner's report.

Switching Battery from Set to Charger

Everyone knows that a storage battery should be kept as completely charged as possible; to make sure this is done, it is necessary that some simple and convenient means be used to change the battery from the set to the charger and back again. A simple double-throw, double-pole switch is commonly used for this purpose, but is not altogether satisfactory, as it is unsightly, and unsafe on account of shorts. A closed snap switch does not answer either, as it is not rugged enough and may be accidentally thrown. An ideal arrangement can be made by fastening two sockets to a block as shown in the illustration, the cap and plug being notched or otherwise marked to show the polarity if they are not of the polarized type. If no extra sockets are at hand, wires may be soldered to the screw halves of the plugs; wires and plugs are then placed in a small cardboard box and the box filled with plaster of

Conserving Furnace Heat

Considerable heat is radiated from the furnace in the basement where it is not needed so much as in the rooms above.

A simple method of turning this waste to account is shown in the illustration. Walls are built around the furnace forming a small room and two registers are provided in the floor above, as indicated. One of these has a length of galvanized-iron pipe extending under the ceiling to the basement floor. All steam or hot-water pipes running along the ceiling in the basement are packed in sawdust as in the lower left-hand detail, if they are not already wrapped with asbestos. The heat given off by the furnace passes up through one register and the colder air in the room above returns into the furnace room through the other register.

It all depends upon the point of view. You can't convince the oldest inhabitant that the good die young.

TALKING LADIES

"WHAT do the Earthwomen talk about?" wondered Jazbo, the man from Mars.

Care at Calving Time

The cow that has just calved should receive no food for the first 24 hours—unless it be a bran mash.

Keep Out Bacteria

The udder and teats become contaminated when cows lie down. The movements of the udder during the milking process cause the particles of dirt to become loosened and fall into the milk.

Dairy Notes

Quality, not quantity, is the important consideration in dairy farming.

DAIRY TALK

SEPARATOR CARE QUITE IMPORTANT

Separating butterfat from the rest of the milk in a cream separator is a delicate process and lack of attention to details, which may seem unimportant, often causes considerable fat to be left in the skim milk.

In the operation of such a machine the little things count for more than when a machine of less refinement is being used.

Too often the user fails to watch these points because even when the separator is sorely neglected it will continue to deliver a fairly good amount of cream at one spout and skim milk at the other.

Particular attention should be paid to the directions furnished with the machine. It should be remembered that delicate bearings operating at high speed will last a long time if they are properly cared for but that they are quickly ruined by dirt or lack of good oil when neglected.

Feed Tags Are Serious Menace to Dairy Stock

"The cow's death was due to a punctured stomach caused by a piece of wire taken in with the feed."

Every sack of feed that is sold must carry a license tag and in many cases these tags are attached with a hook-shaped wire that is economical from the feedman's view and dangerous for the feeder.

In opening and emptying the sacks, it is sometimes easy for the tags to become detached and they at once fall into the feed where they are lost in the mixing.

ARIZONA NEWS BRIEFLY TOLD

The state of Arizona will issue a million and a half dollars in tax anticipation bonds to provide funds for the conduct of the state government until state taxes for the second half of 1925 are paid.

An Arizona crop summary for 1925 has been released by M. R. Wells, agricultural statistician for the U. S. Department of Agriculture. The report does not list many of the principal Arizona crops, but shows that for ten crops, including tame hay, corn, wheat, oats, barley, grain sorghums, beans, white potatoes and wild hay, that the gross farm value taken up to December 1, 1925, was $13,921,510, exceeding last year's mark on the same crops by $50,010.

The industrial employment survey report, just issued from the U. S. Employment Service of the U. S. Department of Labor at Denver, states that industrial and employment conditions in Arizona during December showed a steady improvement over November, especially in metal mining, agriculture, lumbering and general construction.

History

By JOHN DICKINSON SHERMAN

HAWAII is making tentative plans for an elaborate celebration in 1925 of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the discovery of the islands by Capt. James Cook. It is to be hoped that such an observance of this discovery is made—and on a scale befitting the importance to the United States of the voyaging in the Pacific of this famous English navigator. For this importance is large. Captain Cook set in motion forces which had a much greater influence on the early development of America than a casual reading of our history reveals.

Here is a brief chronology of the Hawaiian islands useful in connection with this story:

The islands were probably known to Europeans as early as 1527, but were put on the map by Cook in 1778. He was killed there by natives the next year. The natives were a semi-civilized people of Malayo-Polynesian stock under a feudal system of government, with a king on each of the eight habitable islands. In 1790 King Kamehameha of Hawaii subdued his rivals and founded a kingdom that lasted until 1894. Christianity was introduced from America in 1820 by missionaries. In 1850 Kamehameha III promulgated a constitution establishing civil rights. In 1852 came suffrage and a legislature. In 1894 there was a successful revolution against Queen Liliuokalani and a republic was proclaimed. In 1895 the queen abdicated. August 12, 1898, Hawaii was annexed to the United States. June 14, 1900, it became a territory.

Cook's Several Voyages.

Capt. James Cook (1728-79) was the son of a Yorkshire farm laborer. He volunteered in the Royal navy in 1755 and four years later was in command of the Mercury at Halifax. The Royal society selected him to command an expedition to the Pacific to observe the transit of Venus.

This first voyage to the Pacific was in 1769-71. On his second, 1771-75, he sailed 60,000 miles and encircled the Antarctic region from New Zealand to Cape Horn.

On Cook's first voyage he had a mortality of 40 per cent. On his second he had made such excellent and radical arrangements for health that he lost only one man out of 118. For this service he was made captain and the Royal society gave him the Copley medal "for service to humanity and the maritime world."

Upon the offer of a reward of $100,000 for the discovery of a northwest passage from the Pacific Cook volunteered to take command and sailed with the Resolution and Discovery in 1770 by way of Africa. In 1778 he discovered an island of the Hawaiian group. Then he surveyed the American coast until stopped by ice in Bering strait. The winter of 1779 found him back in the islands, where he discovered Hawaii and Maui. He named the archipelago Sandwich Islands, after the Earl of Sandwich.

Cook was killed in a small affair with natives on Hawaii over the theft of a boat. Cook landed February 13 in Kealahou bay with a lieutenant and nine marines to seize the king, take him aboard and hold him hostage for the return of the stolen boat. The chief which marks the spot of his death was erected in 1874.

Now we jump from Captain Cook, the officer of the English navy, to John Ledyard an American soldier of fortune.

Soldier of Fortune.

John Ledyard (1751-88) was born in Groton, Conn., studied law, went to Dartmouth for missionary training, passed several months with the Iroquois and in 1773 went to Gibraltar as a common sailor, enlisted in a British regiment, was discharged and as a corporal of marines accompanied Cook on his last voyage. In 1782 he deserted from a man of war at Long Island. Thereupon he published from memory his journal of the Cook expedition, the British having confiscated the original. He tried in vain to interest American officials and merchants in a trading expedition to the northwest coast of North America. They did not believe in his journal—or in him. In 1784 Ledyard was in England and France, vainly endeavoring to organize a similar trading expedition. In 1789, with the assistance of Sir Joseph Banks, he set out on foot from Stockholm, ostensibly for Arctic exploration. He arrived in St. Petersburg, early in 1787, but at Leningrad was arrested and deported, reaching London with difficulty. He died under mysterious circumstances about 1790 at the head of an exploring expedition of the African association.

The truth was that Ledyard had a big thing; triangular trade—New England to the Pacific Northwest with trinkets and notions; to China with furs; back home with silk and tea.

For Cook's last expedition had this experience: The sailors bought furs to keep them warm from the natives of the northwest coast. They traded trinkets for seal skins and sea otter skins. Touching at China, the furs commanded extraordinary prices, the Chinese having no heating in their homes and no wadded cloth. A veritable infernal sea otter skin was worth a hundred dollars. The sailors were and merchants who down for a fair price. Boston, Salem, merchants put in $50,000 in 1787, two vessels; the ship Columbia, Capt. Robert Gray, and the ship Santa Fe, Capt. James Wadsworth. The Columbia sailed in 1792 under Capt. Kendrick, had eleven men making Canton in 1792. The ship was to buy up all the fur natives.

Gray was received. He was marched in procession, side by side in helmet and yellow feathers, walking ever seen in the world. John Hancock, sixty, to whom Gray ventured. Yes, then, he had said. And it had been the first American ship to sail around the world. And, quite as important, England, merchants, paid!

So, as John Ledyard, Africa, his Pacific was. He had come true. For the first time, the British sent right back. And triangular trade was the backbone of the nation.

Cook's last voyage was his last. On the second voyage, the ship was captured by the British. The ship was captured by the British. The ship was captured by the British.

John Jacob Astor, a merchant, was the first to establish a trading post on the Pacific coast. He was the first to establish a trading post on the Pacific coast.

And finally, the discovery of a northwest passage from the Pacific to the Atlantic was made by the American explorer, John W. Fremont.

BIENVILLE

SYNOPSIS—Traveling by canoe on the Mississippi, on his way to Biloxi, in the early days of the settlement of Louisiana, William Brampton, English spy, known to Indians and settlers as the "White Indian," sees a Natchez Indian post a declaration of war against the French. For his own purpose, he hastens to Biloxi to carry the news to Bienville, French governor. Brampton meets an old friend, Joe Labrador, Indian halfbreed, who warns him Bienville has threatened to hang him as a spy. Brampton refuses to turn back. He falls in with Jules and Bastie Mator, on their way to Biloxi to secure wives from a ship, the Maire, bringing women from France. At Biloxi Brampton protects a woman from a sergeant's brutality.

"Will you walk to where the boats are, so you may go to the main?" I asked.

"God!" she shivered, staring frantically about. "To the main? To the wilderness! To the savages! Anything to escape that!"

And her gaze followed the group of forlorn creatures now pawing and mauling the two Mators.

"My name is Brampton, I'm English. Something of an outlaw from Virginia. You came to help make Louisiana great?"

"I am Claire Dahisgaard. I've come to die," she simply replied.

"You fear that they misrepresented conditions to you?"

She gave me a quick sidelong glance, as sharp and penetrating as the point of a needle, and with more control of her voice informed me:

"I was picked up in a raid."

My first thought was that she must be the daughter of some poor farmer. For the company's agents in rounding up the friendless to ship overseas had no scruples in taking the daughters of the poor, be they ever so virtuous. But a glance at the slim white hands, so aristocratic and so unused to labor, sent a chill to my heart. She was poor, but no daughter of poor but honest people.

She had been picked up in a raid. That was easily understood. But a young woman with slim soft hands, who had not worked. And yet there was infinite appeal in the small face and silent grief. Her utter helplessness increased the inevitable suspicion. Anyway, it was not for me to condemn her.

I broke the silence by offering:

"I will walk with you to the shore and see you start in one of the first boats."

Her head jerked up as I spoke, because of some aloofness in my tone, I fear. I had not meant to be cruel, for she was heartsick and body-sick, a very young woman as helpless as a child, and marooned in a land which must be to her a perpetual revelation of horrors. "It will be good to go in the boat," she managed to say. "But perhaps not the first boat—it depends."

"It will largely depend on his excellency's orders," I corrected.

"But they—the women—said there would be much waiting. Too few boats—I can tell better when I see them loading."

Here was fine picking and choosing for one of her world.

"Your name is not French," I remarked for the sake of saying something as we walked along the shore.

"Danish—I am Danish," she softly replied.

"And from Paris, or one of the villages?"

"From Paris—last. I have no home—nothing."

We were now on the outskirts of a clamorous mob, where men and women fought to be first to leave the island. I saw Bienville calmly directing his soldiers. One packet was filled and starting for the main. Another had room for two or three, and Bienville ran his cool gaze over the pushing, jostling crowd. His eyes rested on me for a moment without a sign of recognition; then his arm shot out and a finger pointed in my direction, and his voice rose above the confusion to command:

"That woman back there. No; the one in black. Come, mademoiselle."

She paused for a moment and anxiously examined those aboard the boat, and then glided forward without a word or a glance for me. There was a commotion behind me and a short spider of a man, who walked like a sailor, and whose withered face denoted a long life—evilly spent if there is anything in physiognomy—snarled aloud, and with unexpected strength hurled two men and a woman from his path in his efforts to follow her. She heard the animal-like cry and turned her head, and there was an awful horror in her gaze as she beheld the man; and her eyes sought mine and pleaded protection.

Instantly I knew she did not want this fellow to follow her. Intuition told me her fear of him was the reason she was unwilling to make for the boats until she had seen him depart, or knew he was left behind. Instinctively my long leg shot out and the toe of my moccasins caught his instep, and he was down on his face in the sand. By the time he scrambled to his feet she was in the boat and Bienville also was aboard. The governor was calling back to the sergeant:

"The others must wait till the next trip. Get them rations from the ship."

The boat drew away from the shore and the hideous little man was at my throat. I leaped back and he attacked for the second time. He had very long arms and one hand held a dirk. I guarded with the barrel of my musket and flung him back on the sand. This time he rose more slowly, his small, deep-set eyes glowing with murder as he took time to inspect me.

"That's much wiser," I told him. "Your voyage made you bloodthirsty."

"Drown me in bilge, but you're English!" he exclaimed, some of the malice leaving his puckered face. Then venomously: "Blast your eyes! You stopped me from making the main."

He stood with his long arms hanging limply at his sides, and I noticed the little finger on each hand was missing. He had the appearance of great age, and yet he had been as active as a monkey when he sought my throat.

"His excellency would have turned you back. The boat was filled. They haven't taken off all the women yet," I said.

"Women!" he chuckled, turning to three women who had been attracted by the scene.

The three lost their brazen boldness and shrank back from his leering gaze.

"Women!" he repeated. "I've seen 'em afloat, and I've seen 'em ashore. And the dear creatures always took kindly to old Bill Slasher."

"Old Six Fingers is your name," one cried, making the sign of the cross.

"You came over on the Maire?" I inquired.

"Aye, mate. Come because it was my choice. A man who suited with Cap'n Davis and helped sack Pensacola in 'sixty-five ain't to be made to take any v'yages he don't fancy. I want to git ashore and hunt for some of them mines all England and France is talking about."

"Mines, mines!" yelled a clear voice; and a young man in tattered finery came rushing from the direction of one of the ponds, his yellow curls blowing in the breeze, his pale discolored face redeemed by a whimsical smile.

"The mad Mississippian!" screamed one of the wenches, throwing herself in his path and clawing at his ragged cloak which he wore jauntily although the sun poured down terrific heat.

The fellow brushed her aside and stared at me, recognizing me as a stranger. Then arranging his cloak and tenderly caressing the broken plume in his cap he lustily began proclaiming:

"Behold a Mississippian. Who wants some Mississippian? Ten thousand shares at sixteen thousand livres a share! Who buys Mississippian? You, fair sir, with the chestnut hair and beard? Ten thousand shares at sixteen thousand livres! Who wants any Mississippian? The land discovered by Johnny L'as, where silver is so plentiful it is only used in paving roads, where lumps of gold are strewn so thickly that no one cares to dig beneath the surface!"

Six Fingers crowded by me, his eyes winking with greed as he listened to this fantastic harangue, just as he must have listened to it many times on the voyage across. He appeared to have been cast into a trance by the nimble mounting of riches, his eyes glittering and never leaving the speaker's wild countenance. As the speech ended Six Fingers shook his head to shake off the spell and turned to lower at the main. Now the tattered fellow was strutting toward me, doffing his worn cap and bowing low. As I acknowledged his salutation he courteously informed me:

"I am Francois Narbonne. These off-scourings say I am mad. Perhaps it is so. I was poisoned in rue Quincampoix. I sold my heritage, 100,000 livres, and bought an estate in this land of gold. I paid 30,000 livres a square league for land I never saw. Now I pay you my respects, as I take it you must be some overlord; or do you hold only so-called tenure?"

I began to sense tragedy in the pale face and reckless speech. He was not mad, I decided, but close to it. I put him down as a young roisterer back in Paris, who had become fascinated by the ridiculous tales. He had inherited his entire patrimony in the land he had never seen. The island, the view of the main, the nature of his fellow voyagers, had awakened him to the truth. The stock-jobber's patter was the fashion of showing self-delusion, perhaps was his only safeguard against insanity. I concluded I liked him. I briefly stated my name and my reasons for being on the Mississippi.

He threw back his head and laughed, laughing until the tears ran down his thin face. At last he gasped:

"A runaway Englishman forced to live here! And a Frenchman, who gives all his bath for the same blessed privilege! I must go without food for a day and say 12 pater and as many aves at the shrine of the Virgin. No, no. Not all that. I've been without food for three days. I owe nothing more than candles to the altar. I'll turn heretic. I'll turn Indian. Eh, Monsieur Brampton, would you kindly convince me with a display of the latest steps of the war dance?"

"H—! But he's an odd fish!" mumbled Six Fingers. "He was dull enough coming over with his moping and groaning until we was two days from the coast. Then he began his talk about gold till one's mouth would water. Ah, now he begins."

Narbonne, who was addressing nonsense to the circle, suddenly gave his attention to me and explained:

"I was thirsty and wandered to one of the lakes of rare wine, which bless this island, and so was not here when the boats set sail. I was so busy gathering diamonds formed from dewdrops that I lost sight of the precious jewels among us here. I missed one jewel in particular; nor do I see her now. She was dressed in black, most unbecomingly of colors for one entering this land of enchantment. Did she go to the mainland, or is she wandering about the island?"

"In the second boat," I coldly informed him.

The effect of the question on Six Fingers was amazing. He became transformed into a demon of hate, his squat body seeming to dilate as he crouched and glared at Narbonne.

"D—n your lags!" he cried. "So that is your game, eh? You're after her."

"What! The old six-toed rat dares address the Mississippian without uncovering? I must have one of those withered ears." And out came the cut-and-thrust sword and Narbonne was lunging playfully and dexterously at the onlooker. With a scream of rage Six Fingers leaped backward and vanked out his dirk, and catching it by the tip hurled it at his tormentor. Only by dropping to the ground did Narbonne escape it.

Before the matter could proceed to more serious results Sergeant Suarez was between the two men, and hoarsely bawling:

"His excellency rules that blood will have blood. Hanging for a killing. The galleys for the man who attempts to kill. You two are so full of life you shall come with me and help bury two dead men and a woman. The rest of you stay here. And as for you, Englishman, his excellency's orders are that you be here when he returns."

"I came purposely to meet him," I said. "I'll see you again, Monsieur Narbonne."

"Monsieur is very polite. I repeat his words and look ahead to meeting him on the golden, silver mainland. Pard! A grave-digger! He! He! Come along, little six-toed rat, we may find gold."

"This country is full of mines."

It is true that my own countrymen, in petitioning the Lords of Trade to establish military posts on the Bahamas and Port Royal Island to offset the evils of France's activity in colonizing the valley, urged that the cost of these posts could be met by gold mined in the Appalachians—"if only explorations are made to discover such." But unlike the French, my people never deliberately fooled themselves. That the company would resort to almost any deception to lure colonists to Louisiana was shown when silver was carried from Mexico to the upper waters of the Mississippi and later "discovered" there as proof of the rich mines waiting to be uncovered.

Bienville appeared at last, and once more he kept me waiting until he had loaded the two packets; only this time he did not leave with them. I saw Narbonne and Six Fingers return from burying the dead and clamor aboard the second boat. Their grousing task seemed to have made them excellent friends; for they laughed and talked in an uproarious fashion.

His excellency now approached me, his steady gaze never leaving my face. He abruptly began:

"Monsieur Brampton, your coming gives me a disagreeable duty to perform. I could sentence you to be hung. I have had 12 deserters hung, and a spy is worse."

"That depends on the point of view, your excellency," I replied, rising and facing him. "You would never consider one of your spies to be as despicable a creature as one of your deserters. May I assume from your words that you do not intend to hang me?"

"It will be the galleys," he coldly answered. "I should prefer to send you and other malefactors to work in the silver mines in the West. Fat that cannot be until I've completed negotiations with the Spaniards."

"Soldiers from Santa Fe have already come to the Missouri," I informed him. "So there is a trail that might be safer than the gulf route."

"So!" he exclaimed, and I knew I had his interest.

Then he returned to my case and said:

"Monsieur Brampton, you know me. It must always be that an eye calls for an eye. Blood demands blood. Treachery calls for exacting punishment. I will be just; which means the price must be paid. Whether it's one of my soldiers, a poor savage, or a runaway English, the price must be paid."

"Your excellency, I was told on Pontchartrain that you were grieved at something I was supposed to have done. I was warned that you would deal with me severely if I fell into your hands. I asked where I could find you, and the answer was 'Ship Island.' Behold, I am here. Suppose you tell me what I have done to merit your displeasure. I have waited long here to be told."

"No, no, monsieur! Your assurance shall not blind me," he sternly replied. "I have no time to play with words. You know without being told how you have betrayed me."

I indignantly returned:

"Prove it! Or find one man to swear it on the Cross, and you're welcome to put me in a coffin and saw me in two. Your excellency, the accusation is as false as—"

He shook his head and morosely insisted:

"You would have a hard time proving your innocence. You are English. For three years you have been up and down the river. I know it has been said that you dare not go back to Carolina or Virginia. How do we know that is true? The last time you were here 40 of my men deserted immediately after you went up the river."

"So have they deserted before I ever saw the river. So they will continue to desert as long as they are allowed to run loose with the savages and forget the lessons of discipline. They have deserted to Pensacola as well as to the English colonies. They are protected by the priests in Pensacola even now. I repeat, on my oath, that I never encouraged a single desertion. Duty has driven me here, your excellency, and it is to be true to myself rather than because of your deserters that I will now complete my errand."

As I spoke I dropped on my knees in the sand and drew my knife.

"Can you read this?"

And with the knife-point I carefully began a picture in the sand. He stared down at my work, his broad forehead developing creases.

"Yes, I can read that," he slowly murmured. "It is a Natchez declaration of war against me. But I do not believe it."

"H—!" I cried, springing to my feet and thrusting the knife back in the sheath. "You not only will send me to the galleys, but you will insult me first!"

Some Means of Dusting Is Essential in Winter

Chickens never wash, as many other birds do, but cleanse themselves by wallowing in soil. Where board or cement floors are used in the chicken house some means for dusting should be provided during the winter months.

For a flock of 50 or 60 fowls a dust box 2 by 5 feet or 4 by 4 feet will generally be found large enough, and should be placed where it can be reached by sunlight during as much of the day as possible.

Fine, light, dry dust is the best kind with which to fill the box, but sandy loam is good. Hard dust is recommended by many, but it is apt to be filthy. Coal or wood ashes may be mixed with the soil if desired.

Crate Fattened Fowls

Chickens that are crate fattened on the farm should be killed and dressed there unless they are sold on a special market. Packers and produce dealers who buy poultry and fatten it, object to poultry fattened in this way, as they prefer to put the finish on the birds themselves. Birds that are fed on a wet mash do not ship so well as those fattened on grain. If the birds are to be shipped and not dressed it would be better to feed them in a pen on grain.

Cares for Pets

The Royal Veterinary college in London cares for domestic animals in all their injuries and ailments and is the largest institution of its kind in the world.

POULTRY

GOOD BROODER IS QUITE IMPORTANT

One of the most necessary appliances in the poultry business is a good brooder so the chicks can be cared for and raised successfully regardless of weather conditions.

According to Director T. W. Noland of the Missouri state poultry experiment station, Mountain Grove, there is no better method of brooding chicks than the coal-burning brooder stove, although there are as many ways of brooding chicks as there are "hills of fare." It is best to procure a stove of 500-chick capacity and brood 250 chicks with it. This gives about the right number for the stove and the most successful number to place in one group.

A house, 10 by 12 feet, high enough to allow the attendant to work around without stooping, is preferred. The regular "foot-proof colony house," makes a good brooder house. Most any building that is the right size will do. We prefer that the upper sash of the two windows in the front of the house be replaced by unbleached muslin tacked on frames which are made to fit the openings. These frames should be hinged at the top. In this way we can supply plenty of fresh air without drafts even during the coldest weather and can fasten them open on warm days. It should be remembered that it is just as important to keep the brooder house of medium temperature as it is to furnish plenty of heat immediately about the stove.

The brooder house should be floored. It should be placed on a concrete foundation to prevent rats harboring under the floor. If portable houses with double floors are used, one-inch mesh wire should be stretched about the house to exclude chicks and rats from the space under the floor. If the house is six or eight inches above the ground this wire may be removed when the chicks are several weeks old. It is a good plan to run the brooder stove a day or two before placing the chicks around it, so that you may understand it and get the right temperature, which should be 90 to 100 degrees a foot from the hover and two inches from the floor. As the chicks get older, they will choose the desired heat and you can control the stove so as to keep them about a foot from the hover.

An inch and a half of finely cut clover or straw should be kept on the floor of the brooder house. Care should be taken to keep this litter clean, especially around the stove where it should be cleaned at least every other day. Often when brooding the early chicks it is necessary to confine them to the house for weeks. In such instances it is well to supply greens and moisture. Sod helps solve this problem, but the chicks should not be allowed to eat too much of the dirt. If the chicks seem to be too dry as shown by the condition of the fluff and feathers, it is suggested that moisture be added by placing a can of water on the stove or lightly sprinkling the floor about the hover after removing the droppings and before putting in the new litter.

When first placing the chicks in the house, it is well to make a round pen of inch mesh wire two feet outside the edge of the hover. This should be removed as soon as the chicks become accustomed to the stove.

One thing to bear in mind is not to overwork the house if you are expecting your chicks to do their best. Even in small flocks it is best to provide some means of preventing the chicks from crowding. A roosting device across the north or back side of the house will assist in the prevention of crowding. This device should be made with three roosts about eight inches apart and about twelve or fourteen inches from the floor.

It is very important that the chicks be kept free from contamination. The yards and runs should be cultivated and sown to small grain at least once yearly and the brooder house should be cleaned regularly and thoroughly.

Danger in Being Fat
"A lean dog for a long race," is an old proverb, and a lean person for longevity is a corollary that life insurance companies are more and more impressing on the public. At a national convention of life insurance men held recently in Chicago, the president, Mr. Albert M. Johnson, said that fat is killing off Americans so rapidly that special education is needed. He considers it more dangerous to be fat than to travel on a railway, an ocean liner or an airplane. What tenacity it is, then, for a fat man to travel at all!—Youth's Companion.

Sort of Chain Quarrel
My father used to tell a story about a couple recently married who got into an argument.
"I saw a rat," she said.
"It was a mouse," he replied.
"I say 'twas a rat," she declared.
"A mouse," he rejoined.
They parted, but later they saw how foolish they were. They came back together and almost the first word he said were:
"How foolish! we were to quarrel over a mouse."
"But that was a rat," she asserted.
Then the quarrel started again.—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

LOOT!

BY ELMO SCOTT WATSON
(©, 1926, Western Newspaper Union.)

Red Beard, First Great Pirate

PIRACY is as old as history. The first savage man who hollowed out a log with fire and paddled around in this precarious craft probably fell a victim to the first act of piracy when he met another savage traveling on a log on which he had spent no labor.

From time immemorial the Mediterranean sea was ravaged by pirate fleets which made Asia Minor and the islands near it their headquarters, from which they dashed out for raids on the ships of Rome. There is the story of the pirates who captured the young Julius Caesar and held him for ransom for six weeks, during which time the future consul lived on excellent terms with his captors. He told them that he would one day crucify them all, whereat they roared with laughter at this pleasantry. But it was also a matter of record that he kept his word.

Piracy in the Mediterranean continued long after Rome had fallen, and early in the sixteenth century it gave to history the first outstanding pirate leader, the famous Barbarossa or "Red Beard." Red Beard's real name was Uruj, and he was the son of a Turkish renegade and a Christian mother. He was born on the island of Lesbos in the Aegean sea, a stronghold of the Mediterranean pirates, among whom he rapidly rose to a place of accepted leadership.

But feeling the need for a more convenient base from which to conduct his operations, in 1504 Red Beard established his headquarters at Tunis and became the first of the Barbary corsairs whose raids went unchecked until some youthful commanders of the United States navy taught them proper respect for the freedom of the seas.

Red Beard had a convenient arrangement with the sultan of Tunis whereby that eminent ruler was to be given one-fifth of all the booty he took in return for royal approval and protection when it was needed. One of his first exploits was the capture of two galleys belonging to Pope Julius II, which had sailed from Genoa, and the richness of the loot from this expedition showed the sultan that he had made no mistake in agreeing to a partnership with Barbarossa.

The next year the pirate chieftain showed his daring by capturing a Spanish ship with 500 soldiers on

Macready to Try for Altitude of Eight Miles

Plans are being completed by Lieut. John A. Macready for an attempt to capture the altitude record, now held by Callizo of France with 39,586 feet. Macready hopes to rise eight miles. eight days' fighting, during which Red lost an arm, the attack failed. Although Barbarossa became rich and powerful after he had captured the town of Algiers, where he set himself up as sultan, his embroilment with Spain proved his undoing. Charles V. sent an army of 10,000 men to Algiers, defeated the corsair and Red Beard was killed in battle.

A Royal Practitioner of Piracy

ROYALTY in the role of a patron of piracy has never been so unusual, but few monarchs have engaged in the practice themselves. An exception to this is the case of Angora, sultan of Timor, East Indies.

Angora flourished in the days when the East India company was a power in international affairs. But Angora, unimpressed by its importance, refused to allow the company to station garrisons on Timor, and the mighty company marshaled its forces, overran his island, and drove him into his chief town, also named Angora.

Burning for revenge, the sultan turned pirate and set out to sea in a fleet of five prows and several galleys. His first capture was a brig, commanded by Captain Hastings, a relative of the famous Warren Hastings. Hastings was carrying dispatches from Calcutta to the British general besieging Angora. When the pirates swarmed aboard his ship he threw the dispatches overboard to prevent their seizure. For this he was promptly hanged and his crew sent as prisoners to Angora, where they were poisoned.

The sultan's next capture was the Edward, a ship of the East India company, whose crew was also poisoned. Next he defeated a vessel sent out by the government to capture him and followed this by attacking a ship from Burma, with whose ruler he had always been upon friendly terms. The sultan drowned every person on this ship, except one woman.

His next victim was a Malay prahu, the crew of which he shackled and threw overboard by way of variety in murder. Then he sailed into Bombay harbor, and finding the garrison unprepared, easily captured the fort, blew it up and sailed away with a load of rich booty. Shortly afterward he seized an English packet, the St. George, tortured the captain to death, and forced the crew to join his service.

By this time the walls of the East India company had forced the British government to action. One of its greatest ships, the Victorious, was sent against the sultan-pirate, but he slipped past the man-of-war out of the harbor of Angora at night and success

Rev. Edwin A. Corbett is the new "Bishop of Wall Street," succeeding the late Rev. William Wilkinson, who for 25 years preached at noon at Broad and Wall streets. Mr. Corbett was a kind of assistant to Mr. Wilkinson for 11 years.

Japan, there is no record from the other piratical practices and the East India company decided that it would be well to let well enough alone. So the sultan-pirate rounded out his days in peace, and his career is an interesting one in that it proves that not all pirates finished up at the end of a rope. However the fact that he was a royal pirate may have had something to do with that.

That the cold wave had arrived on the Atlantic coast was evidenced by the appearance of the steam trawler Surf as she reached her pier at South Boston after a struggle with the wintry blasts.

'COONS AND 'POSSUMS—FUR, FOOD, AND SPORT

"This item is for the ladies," said a radio announcer reporting a big football game. "As I look around the stadium, I see 1000 red hats, 1500 orange hats, and about 30,000 raccoon coats." Though his guess on the number of raccoon or other fur coats was doubtless wide of the mark, the number of fur coats worn by both men and women for sports and driving has increased enormously in the last few years, and this bit of comment at such an unusually large outdoor gathering is not surprising. The raccoon ranks third among the four most important fur bearers in this country from the standpoint of financial returns from the annual catch, the other three being the muskrat, the skunk, and the opossum.

It would seem that this animal should be more highly valued and protected throughout its range during the breeding period and the time of unprime fur, since it affords not only fur, but also food and sport, yet it shares with many other fur animals the charge of being harmful to people.

MASONIC GRAND LODGE HEAD VISITS NOGALES

Grand Master of the state Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons C. H. Coleman, of Yuma, paid a visit Monday night to Nogales Lodge No. 11 and made a very interesting talk on Masonry and its effect on society. The meeting was one of the best attended that has been held in the border city for some time and Mr. Coleman's talk was well received. Following the meeting a buffet lunch was served, which had been prepared by the ladies of the Eastern Star.

On Sunday evening Mr. Coleman visited the Pacific Masonic Lodge of Nogales, Sonora, which was attended by a number of Masons from Nogales, Ariz.

After all, it's a good thing that chivalry died out. We might be expected to even offer ladies their jobs.

TUBAC—ACROSS THE MOUNTAINS (By Rosy)

Needed a Bodyguard
Supervisor R. A. Campbell, H. H. McCutchan, contractor, and Joe Kane, cattleman, stopped off here this week on their way to Amado. All are from Patagonia and came in the same car. Wonder if Joe wasn't brought along as a bodyguard.

A Place You'd Like to Live in
Yes, good old Tubac is west of the Santa Rita Mountains and is surrounded by the richest farming valley in Santa Cruz county an getting on very nicely.

Mining Experts
We expect Patagonia is crowded with gentlemen following the mining game (the way Tubac is). It is surprising the way these gentlemen are hitting Tubac almost every day. You are welcome. The county is large and mineral deposits are everywhere.

More Oil Talk
Patagonia had better get in shape for oil. Two gentlemen from the Santa Ritas hit town this week and told us they have traveled all over

Santa Cruz county and that they have chosen a spot near Tubac to drill for oil. They live in California.

Check Artists Hit Tubac
Some smooth check artists have recently hit Tubac. They may hit the county jail if they don't watch their step.

More Rain
It started to rain about 6 o'clock January 19 and kept it up all day. Well, it will come in handy on the farms.

May Build a Cotton Gin Here
Farmers down the river say they intend building a cotton gin in Amado which shows the farmers have more brains than they are credited with possessing. Many acres will be planted to cotton this year.

Pack Onions in Boxes
We think it would pay farmers to pack their onions in boxes instead of putting them up in sacks. The produce merchant that buys the crop repacks it and gets twice what you get. See the point?

Tourists a Plenty
It is surprising to note the number of tourists going over the state highway at this point. All classes from the luxuriously equipped to the pan-handling flivver tramp. Well, it pays to advertise.

If printing crime news encourages crime, perhaps we should quit printing earthquake news, too.

In Europe it's the great over-lord. In America it's the great over-lawed.

S. P. WILLING TO RELINQUISH MAIL CONTRACT ON BRANCH

The following is an extract from a letter just received from Amos A. Beets, corporation commissioner in regard to local mail service:

"Supplementing our correspondence of the past few weeks concerning train service and the handling of mail at your station, you are advised that I am in receipt of a letter from the assistant general manager of the Southern Pacific Company at El Paso, which, for your information, I quote as follows:

"Referring to your letters of December 11 and 21 regarding the handling of U. S. mail at Patagonia and St. David. In view of the fact that those towns are served by mixed train service, which unavoidably is more or less irregular, the railroad would make no objection if the government made arrangements with outside parties to handle the mail for those points."

"Cut in Gasoline Due to Competition"—Headline. Reassuring. So many of us were afraid it was the result of philanthropy.
